Preface

I used to wonder why no-one had written the history of the School. It was not until I began to seek out materials for this work that I grasped the reason. It is the simple one that very few records of the early days of the School exist. Or if they do exist they are carefully hidden away and have been forgotten. For some time I lived in the hope that the news that enquiries were being made would lead someone to admit to a knowledge of the whereabouts, or even the possession, of a store of forgotten archives. But hopes have withered. I fear I began my search too late and realise now that the documents may have been among the innocents slaughtered during the last war, when patriotism was enough and local history could go by the board. It was a process which caused the annals of the poor to be even shorter and simpler than they would anyhow have been.

It has proved possible, however, to glean a number of facts about the early days of the School. The Lincolnshire Archives Office was invaluable for this work, and I am deeply indebted to Mrs. Joan Varley, the Archivist, and to Mrs. A. Owen, who as Miss D. M. Williamson was Assistant Archivist, for their help. It was they who brought to my notice for instance the building agreement of 1674, the documents relating to the first Usher, and the engraving showing Nathanael Taylor, the first Head Master of the School. In addition Mrs. Varley has been kind enough to find time in a busy life to read the typescript of this book and to offer valuable suggestions and make corrections to the References. Miss F. E. Thurlby has added to the debt I already owe her by reading and correcting the typescript of the Nelthorpe will.

To Mr. Malcolm Gaze also I owe much. He had written a manuscript history of the Nelthorpe family which he has most generously allowed me to use freely. Although I have tried to quote the sources of most of my statements I have done this only in the most general way in the first chapter by referring to Mr. Gaze's 'History'. His work is fully documented, but since he wrote, the Nelthorpe papers have been sent to form part of the Lincolnshire Archives and have been rearranged. To give Mr. Gaze's references, therefore, would be meaningless ; to go through the papers again at Exchequer Gate would have taken too long, and so I have left the first chapter imperfectly attested to — the more willingly as this method has what is to me the very desirable effect of emphasising the association of Mr. Gaze with this history of the School.

I must likewise express my gratitude to Col. O. S. Nelthorpe, the possessor of this manuscript history, for his kindness in allowing me access to it at all times as well as to other documents at Scawby Hall.

There is very good reason further for me to state by indebtedness to Mr. A. A. F. Stubbs who put at my disposal all the books, documents, and information which Messrs. Hett, Davy and Stubbs had from the days of the old Trustees — before 1878. This collection includes a Minute Book recording decisions of the Trustees from 1759 to 1817, Account Books from 1787 to 1878, and a considerable quantity of correspondence. I am grateful to Mr. Stubbs for his forbearance in allowing me to keep much of this material for years.

I have to thank Mr. Edgar Taylor, the Clerk to the Governors, for producing for me the deeds of School properties (past and present), the Minutes of Trustees' Meetings (on loose sheets) from 1834 to 1877, and the Governors' Minutes from 1878 to the early years of this century. The loose paper-covering for the Minutes from 1834 to 1877 bears the title ' Trustees of Brigg School : Minutes of Meetings, Dec. 18, 1821 ', but there are no papers or entries for the years 1821 to 1834.

Canon P. B. G. Binnall has placed me greatly in his debt by allowing me to see and to make full use of Mrs. Frances Walter's ' Diary ' (the sole copy of which, in the form of a typescript, is in his possession), and to reproduce his silhouettes of James and Frances Walter.

To Mr. Rex Russell I also owe thanks : he directed me to several paragraphs in the Lincoln, Rutland and Stamford Mercury referring to the School during the last quarter of the nineteenth century ; and I was able to discuss with him questions concerning the Ulceby Enclosure.

I appreciate the help I have received from the Lindsey and Holland County Library, the Clerk to the County Council (who gave me facilities for searching for an enclosure of Fulsby), Mr.

E. H. Trevitt, Librarian of the Grimsby Public Library, Mr. E. C. Freeman of the Institute of Education Library, Hull University, the Librarian of the John Rylands Library, Manchester (who supplied information about the Hesleden and Peacock Manuscripts), the Librarians of the Lambeth Palace Library and St. Paul's Library, and Mr. W. G. Hiscock (who referred me to books on the Evelyns). The Librarian of the Lincoln Public Library has allowed me to reproduce drawings from the Banks collection in his care. The Ministry of Education has been good enough to permit me to use the files of the Legal Branch : from Miss E. O. Allen and the staff of this department I received much kindness. I am also obliged to the staffs of the British Museum Reading Room, the Public Record Office, and the London Library. I am grateful to the Vicar of Hibaldstow and to his predecessor for allowing me to see the Parish Register at Hibaldstow Church, and to the Vicars of Scawby and Wrawby, who gave me permission to photograph memorials in their churches. Mr. A. A. Tate very generously supplied me with some of the photographs I have used.

My sincere gratitude must also be expressed to the Head Master and to the Foundation Governors of the School and to the Committee of the Old Briggensians who have given me every encouragement and help in preparing for publication.

If I have failed to acknowledge the courtesy or assistance of anyone, I crave pardon for the oversight.

There is perhaps one other matter which calls for explanation. This book takes the story of the School only up to 1919. It is the history of the first quarter-millennium. There is no lack of materials for an account of the past forty years. The very amplitude of the records would indeed cause this book to be overweighted at one end if they were included. But in ten years' time the tercentenary of the School will be celebrated and a history of the fifty years, 1919—1969, may then be most fittingly written.

CHAPTER ONE

The Nelthorpes

WHEN the Heralds' visitation was held in Lincolnshire in 1634 a great many new names were added to the list of landowners as a result of the tremendous amount of trade in land which had started in the sixteenth century. It was the dissolution of the monasteries which had set the movement off, but it continued for well over a century, leading to the disappearance of the names of some landowning families and the emergence of others.* Among these new names was that of Nelthorpe.

As with other rising families there was little that was known for certain about origins, and the Nelthorpe pedigree drawn up for the 1634 Visitation started somewhat uncertainly. Without giving any dates it named Christopher Nelthorpe of Staplehurst in Kent as the first known progenitor and traced the line from him through Nicholas and Nicholas's son and grandson (both named John), the first of London and the second of Waghen near Beverley in Yorkshire.

Although the name Nelthorpe occurs early in the sixteenth century near Grantham,¹ it is from the John Nelthorpe of Yorkshire that the branch with which we are concerned in Lincolnshire sprang.

This John Nelthorpe married Anne Wharfe, daughter of Richard Wharfe of Clixby, near Caistor, and although nothing seems to be known about the Wharfe family it was probably this marriage which brought Nelthorpes into Lincolnshire. Something is known for certain about John Nelthorpe of Waghen — sufficient to throw doubt on Abraham de la Pryme's assertion in his Diary :²

' These Nelthorps (of which there is several in this country), [are] descended all from one Tho[mas] Nelthorp, who was taylor to Queen Elizabeth, who got a great estate under her, and purchased several houses in Hull, and several manors in this county.' De la Pryme† was always interesting but, in his pursuit of the striking and colourful, ingenuous to the point of credulousness.

*Professor Tawney dealt brilliantly with this phenomenon in his "Rise of the Gentry" Economic History Review x1, 1. (1941).

†Curate of Broughton 1695-6.

John Nelthorpe of Waghen is given some sort of place and shape by an inventory of his goods dated 29th March, 1579. His will (1580) mentions five children who were all under age and 'the child my wife is now going with'. The second son, Richard*, was left to the guardianship of John Wharfe (his brother-in-law), and he appears to have been the founder of the fortunes of the Lincolnshire Nelthorpes, though whether because he lived in this district with John Wharfe or because his father already had land in North Lincolnshire is uncertain.

He certainly settled down in Lincolnshire : on 25th August 1601 he married at Wrawby Church Ursula, daughter of Martin and Effam Gravenor (or Grosvenor). According to William Hesleden to whose account of the Nelthorpe family written in 1833 Mr. Gaze refers³, Gravenor lived at Messingham. But there seems to be some doubt about this. To the request for the names of Papist recusants in 1600 Effam wife of Martin Gravenor, innholder, of Brigg was given ;⁴ in the Episcopal Visitation of 1607 she was again cited as one who did not frequent her parish church, and this was given as Bigby Church.⁵ It seems then that Richard Nelthorpe's father-in-law lived in that part of Brigg which lay in the parish of Bigby, that is, the south side of Brigg as far as the river, and possibly therefore in the Market Place.

Richard Nelthorpe acquired land on a large scale : soon after he married Ursula Gravenor his father-in-law conveyed to him a considerable piece of land in Scawby (1605) which Gravenor had bought three years earlier for £20. He himself purchased more land there in 1605, 1608, 1609, 1614, 1624, and he bought the manor and rectory† of Scawby in 1626. But these additions were only a fraction of what was garnered in a long acquisitive life. Well did Professor Tawney term the new landed gentry of the late sixteenth and early seventeenth centuries 'this tenacious class'. Before Richard Nelthorpe died in 1640 he held property in Beverley, Gainsborough, Doncaster, Brigg, Wrawby, Burton-Stather, South Ferriby, Scawby, Sturton, Broughton, North Kelsev, Killingholme, Kirmington, Barrow, Messingham, Legsby, and Bradley. (The buying of Bradley Manor in 1633 landed him in trouble : he was charged in 1635 with the 'continuance of the depopulation of Bradley' and although the offence had started with the previous owner Nelthorpe was fined £600.) One of his most important purchases was in Barton. Here in 1620 he bought from Eliz. Chapman of Bury St. Edmunds the property called Baysgarth with four acres of park and about twelve oxgangs of land besides.⁶ It was in the Barton house that two of the eighteenth century Nelthorpe baronets were to live.

*He had been born in 1569 and died in 1640.

†A century earlier this had belonged to Thornholme Priory.

Richard Nelthorpe himself probably lived in Brigg. (Mr. Gaze suggests that it was in the house which was known until 1838 as the White Lion Inn.) But he began to build the house at Scawby. Insufficient is at present known about this building and exactly when it took place : one part of the house bears the date 1686 ; but it seems certain that Richard Nelthorpe lived at Scawby for some years. The Scawby Registers show that there were Nelthorpe baptisms there in 1628 and 1633 ; Ursula, Richard's wife, was buried there in 1637 ;⁷ and finally Richard himself was buried there, the day after he died on 6th May, 1640.

Scawby Church has busts of Richard and Ursula and the inscription : ' Hic jacet quicquid mortale est Richardi Nelthorpe gen., patroni huius ecclesiæ, domini manerii, nec non lataritæ domus fundatoris, uxorisq. suæ Ursula Martini Grosvenor gen., filiæ primægeniæ [sic], ex qua numerosam suscepit utriusq. sexus prolem, filios nimirum quatuor nec minorem filiarum numerum . . . qui ad plenitudinem annorum viatores in terris tandem liberis et amicis valedixere, annis peregrinationis (eius 71, suæ 52) redemptionis 1640, May 5°, 1632, Dec. 4°.

' Our thread is spun and thine doth shorter grow,

Spectator, eye not then things here below.'

He had expressed in his will a wish to be buried in the chancel of Scawby Church ' where my vitall body shall become wormes meate '.

By his will his eldest son Edward inherited Scawby and a good deal of other property. But the younger son John received Barton, Gainsborough, Wrawby (Townsend Closes), Legsby, and much else.

The Scawby branch (carried on through Edward, his son Richard,* and Richard's grandson and great-grandson) died out in 1788 when the great-grandson, Edward, died unmarried. But a younger grandson of Richard (the first Scawby Nelthorpe) inherited the Barton property. He also inherited a baronetcy from his uncle. Eventually in 1788 the Scawby and Barton properties were reunited under the Nelthorpe baronets.

It is the second son of the first Scawby Richard who acquired and transmitted the baronetcy. He was John Nelthorpe, the founder of Brigg Grammar School.

*There is a portrait of him at Scawby Hall, Bible in hand, opened at the Book of Job. Unfortunately, Mr. Gaze points out, it is not possible to identify the passage as there are not two consecutive chapters in Job beginning with F and T respectively.

He had been born (probably in the house in the Market Place at Brigg already referred to) in 1614, being baptised at Wrawby 27th November, 1614. For two years (1629-31) he was at Mr. Osgodby's school in Brigg and then entered St. John's College, Cambridge as a pensioner on 30th April, 1631.⁸ With him entered too his cousin, also named John Nelthorpe, son of Edward Nelthorpe of Beverley. He too had been educated at Osgodby's school,⁹ and he was to go on with the Brigg John Nelthorpe to Gray's Inn,* which they entered on 19th November, 1634.¹⁰ The Beverley John appears to have left London, though there is much uncertainty about it; his son John settled at Little Grimsby where he died in 1737.

Our John Nelthorpe does not appear ever to have lived at Scawby: as far as can be ascertained his life was spent in Gray's Inn, except for a period during the Civil War and under the Commonwealth. So much is unknown about him that his political and religious views can only be guessed at. The reference to him by Nathanael Taylor, a pious Anglican, as 'the restorer of several impropriations to the Church'¹¹ suggests that he was an upholder of the Church of England. But his activities under the Commonwealth were undoubtedly Parliamentary.† There does not seem much likelihood of his being confused in this matter with his cousin John if it is sure, as is asserted, that this cousin although he sat (for Beverley) in the Long Parliament to which he was elected in 1645, refused to act against the King.

John Nelthorpe, the founder of Brigg Grammar School, was a close associate of the Presbyterian Colonel Rossiter of Somerby who was commissioned to raise a regiment of horse for the New Model Army in 1645 and was then given command of all the Parliamentary forces raised in Lincolnshire.

He had served earlier under Rossiter: his name occurs in a list of officers under the command of the Parliamentary leader, Sir Thomas Fairfax, in 1642;¹² he was a captain then under the immediate command of Colonel Rossiter.

Rossiter now chose as one of his officers John Nelthorpe.¹³ As Rossiter fought at Naseby later in the year it is possible that Nelthorpe was there too. Later when the principal fighting was over John Nelthorpe acted as one of the attorneys who were given the task of buying Crown land for the purpose of wiping off some of the Army's arrears of pay.¹⁴ At the time when Cromwell was preparing to go to Scotland (for the campaign in which he won the battle of Dunbar) Nelthorpe was described¹⁵ as 'Adjutant-general, of Gray's Inn . . . Has served under Lord-General Cromwell, and is now ready to go to Scotland.' He is mentioned again in 1660¹⁶ when there was much uncertainty owing to the failure of any of the Parliamentary or Army leaders to establish firm government after Cromwell's death in 1658. One of the centres of trouble was General Lambert who had been seized and put in the Tower but who had escaped. Amongst the troops which deserted to join Lambert was that of 'Major Nelthorpe,' though he himself took no part in the move.

*Like so many of the sons of other landed gentry, particularly in the Midlands and Eastern Counties. D. Brunton and D. H. Pennington (in their Members of the Long Parliament, p.6) suggest that the landowners sent so many sons to the Inns of Court because of the vital importance of what was 'still mainly land law'.

†As has been pointed out by Christopher Hill (History XLI, p. 69) the opposing sides in the Civil War did not essentially represent religious divisions.

It seems at first sight surprising that, with this record, John Nelthorpe should have been given a baronetcy after the Restoration of Charles II. But he probably shared the views of most moderate men when Cromwell's death seemed likely to lead to anarchy, that the only solution was to bring back the King. He had been described as a sound republican in 1659,¹⁷ but many sound republicans changed their views in 1660 and not a few of them received honours when the King returned. Rossiter, a more prominent man during the fighting than John Nelthorpe, though he fell into disgrace in 1647, was rewarded by a knighthood 27th May 1660. Drayner Massingberd another Lincolnshire man who had raised a troop to fight against the King was pardoned and knighted after the Restoration.¹⁸ Monck, himself the outstanding example, being created Duke of Albemarle, presented to the restored King a list of names of seventy men who were recommended for elevation to the Privy Council. All except two were former opponents of the King.¹⁹

John Nelthorpe did not receive his honour until 1666, when he had only three more years to live. He was unmarried. His will hints at a broken romance with its bequest of a 'table diamond ring,' gold watch, a knife with an agate haft set with diamonds, and a jewel worth £500 with the motto 'Love's Paraphrase' to 'that virtuous lady Mrs. Mary Langham'. He also left her the thirty one angels his father had given him for 'her that should be my wife'. But he must have expected to die a bachelor in 1666 since he managed to ensure then that the baronetcy should descend to his nephew Goddard.

There is some uncertainty about his death, as about his life. Wotton's English Baronetage²⁰ asserts that he was buried in St. James's, Clerkenwell 'where a handsome white monument of the Ionic order adorned with columns' had been erected. The published parish register of St. James's however does not record his burial. The old church was pulled down in 1788²¹ and it may have been then that the monument was transferred to Scawby, he being described on the tablets as 'of Scawby'.

The monument remains in Scawby Church. A translation thought to have been made about 1830 runs :

‘ Near this stone lies John Nelthorpe of Scawby . . youngest son of Richard Nelthorpe and Ursula Grosvenor, who having increased a moderate fortune by frugality and a uniform conduct of life, was the first that introduced the title of baronet into the honourable family of the Nelthorpes. He spent the greatest part of his life in Gray’s Inn in the study of the law and the discharge of his Christian duty. He lived unmarried to the detriment of his family. He was worthy to be reckoned among the good, rather than the common rank of men, better known to himself than anyone : a follower of real virtue without an ostentatious appearance of it. When he had now fulfilled all the duties of life, that the practice of his virtues might not be too confined, and that he might not seem to have accumulated wealth for the benefit of his heirs alone, he gave many presents to poor debtors, he bequeathed many legacies to poor and worthy persons, he endowed a school for the education of youth in the neighbourhood of Scawby and enriched his friends with unexpected liberalities. Having laid aside all concern and regard for the affairs of this life, having fixed his thoughts on Eternity, and ripe for his change, he died in the year of our Lord 1669 and the 55th of his life.’²²

Possibly the same hand as translated the inscription wrote another comment on Sir John :

‘ Sir John Nelthorpe who stood high in the profession of law appears to have imbibed the religious enthusiasm of the period in which he lived, and from the general tenor of his will we have strong evidence of his being not merely an observer but an active promoter of the good purposes then the object of public anxiety.’

His nephew Goddard lived in London,* though he is said (unreliably) to have visited the Barton properties he had inherited from his uncle.²³ But his grandsons succeeded him in the baronetcy, his sons having predeceased him. The elder grandson was only twenty five when he died and his son Henry, the fourth baronet, died when he was eleven, being succeeded by his uncle, also a Henry. After him the direct line was unbroken until 1830. The family never achieved any national fame : they were content in the eighteenth century to live as country squires, solid but unpretentious.

One Nelthorpe did manage to win himself a place in the national story (even to the extent of figuring in Macaulay’s History), much to the embarrassment of his family, no doubt, but to his own complete undoing. He was Richard Nelthorpe, cousin of the first Sir John. His grandfather Edward Nelthorpe (a son of John Nelthorpe of Waghen and brother of Richard of Barton and Scawby), had been a mercer and draper at Beverley, and mayor of that place. Edward's son, James*, sat as Member for Beverley in the Long Parliament (like his brother John). He too was a mercer and draper and he also was mayor of Beverley. He sent his son, Richard, to Gray's Inn and there the young man must have come into contact with the Whig elements who were violently opposing the restored Stuarts. When in 1683 the Rye House Plot, a desperate scheme to kill both Charles II and James Duke of York, his brother and heir, was revealed, Richard Nelthorpe was implicated. He maintained that he had taken no part in the attempt, had in fact been away in the north at the material time. He took the prudent course, however, of leaving the country and going to Holland (like so many of the discredited Whig leaders just then).†

There he remained, an outlaw, till Charles II died in 1685 and the Catholic Duke of York ascended the throne as James II. An opportunity for his return was provided by the Duke of Monmouth (Charles II's illegitimate son), who led an expedition from Holland to claim the crown of England with Nelthorpe as one of his captains. Popular as the cause of the 'Protestant Hero' was in the West Country, where Monmouth landed, the invasion was an utter failure. Sedgemoor marked its destruction. The rebels fled, from Monmouth to the poorest rustic who had enrolled under him. There was little hope for the fugitives: large numbers were seized, some to be executed out of hand, others to be herded into prison to await trial by Judge Jeffreys, and Monmouth himself to be beheaded.

Richard Nelthorpe had escaped immediate capture. With John Hicks, a Nonconformist divine, he moved eastwards towards the Hampshire coast. At Ringwood they found refuge with 'Lady Alice' Lisle‡ widow of a former member of the Long Parliament who had been made a lord by Cromwell. She knew nothing of them but acted merely out of humanity in giving them shelter. Her innocence did not save her when they were found by the King's troops — Richard Nelthorpe concealed in the chimney. Jeffreys condemned her to death by burning, and only influential intercession persuaded James II to grant her the modified mercy of beheading.

Nelthorpe was not dealt with by Jeffreys: he was regarded as one of the important men in the rebellion and Penruddocke who seized him at Moyles Court received £100 for his work. It was to London that Nelthorpe was taken and there he was flung into Newgate. On 27th October 1685 he was brought before Lord Justice Herbert and other judges at Westminster. The trial was a formality, was in fact unnecessary, as he was an outlaw. He protested his innocence of ever having attempted to kill the king, but he was sentenced to be hanged, drawn and quartered. Mr. Gaze (on whose MS History this paragraph is based) mentions the legend that had Jeffreys tried Nelthorpe he would have spared his life in return for a gift of £10,000, but that Nelthorpe refused to impoverish his children.* Accordingly the gibbet was erected by the gateway of Gray's Inn, and Nelthorpe, dressed in plain black but with a white satin cap over a linen cap, was taken there on Tuesday, 30th October. The sentence was carried out.

*He was appointed one of the Judges who were to try Charles I but struck his name from the list, having, it appeared, strong objections to becoming a regicide. (M. Gaze: History of Nelthorpe Family).

†From Holland he went to Switzerland to attempt to win support for another move against James. (B. Little: The Monmouth Episode, p. 199).

Just before the execution he wrote to his family that he was not only ready to die but wished to die. 'I die in Charity with All the World.'

*After Richard Nelthorpe's death his attainder was reversed by William III and Nelthorpe's children were thus able to inherit their father's property. One of his grandsons, George Nelthorpe of Seacroft, seems to have been on terms of friendship with the Scawby baronets in the third quarter of the eighteenth century. There is a portrait of him in Scawby Hall.

The Endowment of the School

GRAMMAR schools were no new thing in the seventeenth century. There had been a school off and on at Lincoln from the fourteenth century, and possibly much earlier ; and by the seventeenth century there were in Lincolnshire well-established schools at Louth, Grantham, Gainsborough, Spalding, Moulton, Alford, Horncastle, Grimsby, and Boston.* Even though they lacked the aid and direction of a central Ministry of Education they, and other schools outside Lincolnshire, appear to have conformed to a pattern. Writing in 1659 Hoole divided English Grammar Schools into two sorts : those in which the pupils were fairly numerous and the standard of attainment was low, and those preparing scholars for the universities. Both sorts commonly had a master and an usher, the latter being responsible mainly for what was little more than an elementary education for the younger boys. One large building would house masters and pupils. There might be fifty or sixty pupils, a few of them boarders. Their tuition was generally provided free. There is some disagreement as to the precise meaning of the word ' free ' in the expression ' Free Grammar School '. It is argued by some, persuasively and ingeniously, that the freedom meant merely absence of any sort of control or right of interference by outside authorities (other than the Crown). The other view is that ' free ' implies that no fees were to be charged. This is understandably the more popular view and seems on the face of it the more likely interpretation. It is not altogether clear how the description of the school at Brigg as the ' Free Grammar School ' or the ' Free School,' terms frequently applied to it, should be interpreted, as the will of its founder directs that some of its pupils were to receive the more advanced tuition free, and all comers were entitled to elementary instruction without having to pay anything. In the main there can be little dispute : Sir John Nelthorpe seems to have envisaged free education for most of the scholars ; but it may have been open to the Master to give instruction in the learned tongues to boys other than those specified, in return for a fee.

*" Lincolnshire is more thickly studded with ancient schools than perhaps any other county." A. F. Leach in the Victoria County History of Lincolnshire. Vol. II, p. 421.

It does however appear to have been the general practice everywhere for entrance fees or capitation fees to be paid by the pupils. This system probably arose from the poorly-paid nature of the schoolmaster's employment. The seventeenth century writer already mentioned, Hoole, speaks of the salaries paid to those who taught. He considers that ushers should receive from £30 to £80 a year (the value of the £ being of course that of his times), while 'it were to be wished that a constant Salary of (at least) 100 l. per annum might be allowed to the Master'. But it is clear that he had little hope that reasonable salaries would in fact be paid. Where there existed an endowment attached to the school the position might be very different: a schoolmaster assured of his salary and independent of local authorities might be fairly well-off. Not all were in this happy position though, and capitation fees were probably necessary to attract the best schoolmasters. There is no positive evidence to show that entrance fees were charged at Brigg before the nineteenth century; but on the 6th December, 1808²⁴ the Trustees decided that such fees should not in future be demanded, thus establishing that the custom was then in existence. How long it had existed it is impossible to say. It may well have been one of the numerous abuses that notoriously crept into so many grammar schools during the eighteenth century.

All grammar schools, at any rate in the fifteenth century, whether they fell in practice into Hoole's first or second category, aimed at being 'purely grammatical' and at training up 'scholars, which about sixteen or seventeen years of age, are fit to be sent to the University'. This desirable status was naturally difficult for a small country grammar school to attain, owing to the comparative lack of facilities in a rural area for boys to acquire the arts of reading and writing which were needed before they could proceed to a study of Latin and Greek. J. W. Adamson has pointed out in The Illiterate Anglo-Saxon that ability to read and even to write was much more common from the fourteenth century onwards than is generally supposed.* And Alford Grammar School's Rules of 1599 insisted that only those who could already read and write should be admitted (though J. W. Adamson is inclined to write this off as a piece of affectation).²⁵ But before the beginning of the seventeenth century most smaller grammar schools had been compelled to undertake the instruction of little children ('petties'): it was usually the task of the usher to teach them the alphabet and reading.

*Many private schools existed in the seventeenth century. There was one in Brigg, run by a Mr. Osgodby, to which both John Nelthorpe (the founder of Brigg Grammar School) and his cousin John (son of Edward Nelthorpe of Beverley) went. (Venn: Alumni Cantab.)

The Episcopal Visitation of 1607 also reveals that 'Edw. Plasher teacheth schole, but, nothing but Englishe' in Wrawby and Brigg.

But the main work of a grammar school consisted in the training of boys in the Greek and Latin languages. The New Learning had installed Grammar in pride of place for schools, and that aimed at giving a knowledge of the classical languages, so necessary in the prevalent humanistic view for the turning 'of education into a discipline for life,'²⁶ and for the achievement of the humanistic purpose — that of making each student an 'abyss of learning'. Latin had throughout the Middle Ages been the accepted language of all education, in school or university. Greek did not however begin to find its way into many of the schools until well into the sixteenth century; and Hebrew in spite of strong efforts to introduce it as a school subject made little headway until the seventeenth century. It is significant that Greek and Hebrew both established themselves in the seventeenth century — an age which took its religion, whatever its form, very seriously. Greek certainly had a classical importance but to the Bible student of seventeenth century England it was the key to a true understanding of the New Testament. Similarly Hebrew was valued in relation to the Old Testament; indeed it could hardly be said to have any value apart from it, though Hebrew does not appear to have been considered so essential as Greek. Hoole however in his *New Discovery of the Old Art of Teaching Schoole*²⁷ maintained that Hebrew was not really difficult 'because it goeth word for word with our English, and is not so copious in words as the Greek and Latine'; in any case, he said, at least the elements must be learned at school or it was unlikely they would ever be mastered.*

The system of education whether in Latin, Greek, or Hebrew was somewhat lacking in variety. Whatever the original incentive to instil these tongues may have been, humanist or religious, educational practice in the seventeenth century had settled down into a scheme which called for the study and classification of an agreed number of books, together with an analysis of paragraphs, sentences, and words, all aiming ultimately at giving the pupil a firm grasp of the art of writing in the language studied. It is certain that interest would nevertheless insist on creeping in, whether through the ingenuity of a schoolmaster who could think up new tricks, or through the interest of his personality, or through his ability to communicate his own white-hot passion for his subject. But the number of those who could breathe, Ezekiel-like, upon the dry bones and bring them to life must have been small.

A movement was afoot in the seventeenth century to bring about changes in the curriculum, though inevitably it made slow progress. It was an attempt to modernize the educational process and its origin lay in a growing realization that what had suited an earlier age — the schooling which aimed solely at the production of scholars, professional men, and administrators — no longer fitted an age of growing trade and manufacture. Such an economy called for some instruction in mathematics, in the natural sciences, in living foreign languages, in English literature. And more than ever it was necessary to have 'petty-schools' or lower schools where children could be taught how to read, write, cipher, and 'cast an accompt'.* These last two were especially important accomplishments which the schools must foster: the ability to read had for two hundred years been fairly widespread, the art of writing rather less so; but the third R was more difficult to master. Yet, with the other two, it was essential if the clerks needed in commerce were to be produced.²⁸ Foster Watson points out also²⁹ that the seventeenth century had produced a 'bulge' in the numbers of children, who were likely to be an intolerable nuisance unless they could be absorbed into the discipline of some educational framework. Everything seemed to point to a revolution in the schools.

Yet the fight was not easily won. Well-established and well-endowed institutions give ground barely perceptibly in the face of attack. They tend to be 'last-ditchers.' Foster Watson³⁰ indicates that at least twenty-five new grammar schools had arithmetic laid down as part of their studies between 1660 and 1700. But as far as the grammar schools were concerned it was only in English that any decisive advantage was won in the generation or two after 1660. Very slowly did schoolmasters resign themselves to teaching Latin as a dead instead of a living language.³¹

Now Sir John Nelthorpe, whatever part he may have played in the political revolution of the seventeenth century, was a lawyer — a member of a profession traditionally and necessarily conservative — and no hot-head. There is little of the ardent revolutionary, the man who would count the world well lost for a theory established, to be observed in his portrait, with its still look and its calculating, watchful eyes. There is no reason to doubt the sincerity of his wish to encourage education and to help the children of the area in which he had spent his youth. He was unmarried and had no family to provide for, yet the provision for the baronetcy to descend to his nephew Goddard testifies to his affection for the boy. He might well have chosen to leave everything to Goddard and his other nephews and nieces. The fact that instead he chose to found a school in a small remote market-town indicates no lukewarm desire for education. But there is little in his will to suggest that he had any knowledge of the educational trends of his time. The famous Czech educational reformer, Comenius, might never have lived as far as Sir John was aware though his death occurred only a year or so before that of Comenius. The reformer was anxious to extend the school curriculum to include the study of physical science. The founder of Brigg Grammar School evidently had no desire to pioneer or to experiment, at any rate in the section of his school where learning was to be taken seriously — that is in the upper school. The provision in his will for the teaching of arithmetic does however indicate a consciousness at least of one deficiency in the traditional school curriculum.

All that we know of Sir John Nelthorpe suggests that he was more concerned with religion than with humanism. It was, of course, common form in his age to strike a note of piety in the preamble to one's last will and testament ; but there is an unmistakable ring of sincerity — as well as of melancholy — in Sir John's opening words.* He speaks of himself as ' seriously weighing . . . the frailty of Man's life, how that the dayes of his Pilgrimage are few and evill, and that when we least think of it Death many tymes knocks att our Dores '. He recommends his soul into the hands of his ' most faithfull creatour, whose it is and for and by whom it is and was created,' and looks to the time when he ' may have nothing to do but to dissolve and be with Christ, which is best of all '. These are the words of one to whom Greek and Hebrew — one aspect of the means of grace and the hope of glory — would far outweigh in importance any scientific studies however brave and new the world they promised. They are what we should expect of a man who had fought with Cromwell.

He adhered then to the traditional education when he declared that his ' mind and will was that ' in the new school which he proposed to endow at Brigg, the children of certain villages or towns were to be ' taught the Lattin, Greeke, and Hebrew languadges, to write alsoe and Arethmaticke '. These favoured places were Brigg, Wrawby, Scawby, Castlethorpe, Broughton, Messingham, North Kelsey, Legsby, Ulceby, Fulsby, and West Ashby. But all comers were to be entitled to receive instruction in reading, writing, and arithmetic. These would form an elementary or lower department of the school ; but it seems clear that in one sense it was not intended there should be a gulf fixed between classical and elementary schools. The lower school would contain children both from the favoured localities and also from outer darkness, though only the former could rise to the upper region. What may have happened in practice is another matter. It is at least possible that the Master receiving the young offspring of a parent in a desirable social position would wish to receive him into his own house and teach him himself rather than pass him on to the Usher, whose task it would be in the main to undertake the elementary work.

*See Appendix A.

As has already been noted, children from the specified localities were to 'have their learning gratis'; and all other children 'whose parents, governors, or overseers shall send them thither from any other places shall be taught . . . without paying anything . . . for their teaching or instruction'. On the question of entrance or capitation fees the will is silent, though Sir John must have been aware of the practice of demanding them, and it is difficult to imagine that, lawyer as he was, he would have overlooked the need for making clear his 'mind and will' had he objected to the custom. It is, however, obvious from the wording of the will that it was only 'learning,' 'teaching,' or 'instruction' that were to be free: such boys as were taken as boarders by Master or Usher, might be charged boarding fees. The only exception concerned 'poor boys' from Legsby and Fulsby: boys 'chosed out of' these villages, 'and noe other place whatsoever,' were to be given lodging, food, clothes, and books from the endowment. No number was laid down: merely as many as the revenue set aside for their maintenance would support were to be kept at school until they had learned to read, write and sum; then their places were to be taken by others.*

The day-to-day conduct of the school was to be entrusted to a Master and Usher; and to house them and their pupils it was ordered that there should be put up a schoolhouse and a dwelling-house. (The will mentions only one dwelling-house for the Master and Usher, though it can hardly have been intended they should keep house together. Certainly the Trustees of the School interpreted the founder's intention as being to provide them with a house each.) The building was to be on land provided by Sir John Nelthorpe, land known as Townsend Closes and described as being in the parish of Wrawby and adjoining the town of Brigg. This land, estimated at nine and half acres, was to be part of the endowment of the school. For two hundred years it was to be the perquisite of the Master. It now forms the school playing-fields (with a slight addition made in 1950).

The land had acquired its name at the end of the sixteenth century when it was bought by Edward Townsend, who is described as 'draper of Brigg',³² and John Townsend, whom the relevant deeds³³ speak of variously as being a draper of Caistor, a woollen draper of Brigg, and a yeoman of Wrawby. The land purchased by Edward Townsend was one close (together with rights of fishing in the River Ancholme), and that bought by John Townsend consisted of ten selions (i.e. strips) and formed a second close lying just to the south of the first. The two closes passed in the early seventeenth century into the hands of John Townsend's son, Edward who is described as 'gentleman, of Wrawby' in an indenture made 6th May 1618. This indenture defined the location of the two closes. They lay in the West Field of Wrawby 'between a certain place called the Shortholmes on the north and a close called Chapel Close and divers other selions of land of Robert Tyrwhitt, Esquire and divers other freeholder tenants of Wrawby . . . on the south, abutting upon a certain meadow called Fulbeck and upon the Longholmes on the east; and upon a close of . . . Robert Tyrwhitt . . . and upon the Butt Lane near Glamford Brigg . . . on the west'. Butt Lane was to become later Grammar School Lane or Grammar School Road.

The other party to the indenture was Richard Nelthorpe 'Gentleman of Brigg,' the first builder of Scawby Hall and the father of Sir John Nelthorpe. He had already held the land under a mortgage (made 11th December, 1599 when perhaps the Townsend fortunes were beginning to show signs of failing), and now he bought it for £130. With it went 'all those two several waters or fishings within the river of Ancholme' already mentioned. This seems to be the last that is heard of these 'fishings'; it would be interesting to know what happened to them.* John Nelthorpe had inherited Townsend Closes from his father in 1640.

In addition to this land at Brigg he endowed the school with lands in various other parts of Lincolnshire. He held 'lands, tenements, and hereditaments' at Ulceby† and these were for the maintenance of the Usher. His property in Horncastle, West Ashby, Fulsby, 'or elsewhere which I purchased of Nicholas Cressey, gentleman'‡ was to be partly to provide the Master's stipend and partly to pay for the clothes, food, lodging, and tuition of the poor boys from Fulsby and Legsby. The will makes

*The information available is that they still exist, but it is certain that the School does not enjoy possession of them.

†In February 1654 Sir Christopher Wray of Glentworth, and Frances, his wife, conveyed the manor of Ulceby to Edward Nelthorpe of Scawby and John Nelthorpe of Gray's Inn for £2,400 of which Edward Nelthorpe paid 4 parts and John 1. On Oct. 1656 Edward and John Nelthorpe divided the purchase: certain lands were conveyed to John with the covenant that he should enjoy a fifth part of the manor of Ulceby. (Old Lincolnshire, 1885. p. 223.)

‡In 1657: Lincolnshire Notes and Queries viii (1904-5). Canon A. R. Maddison (in Lincolnshire N. and Q. VI) notes that the Cresseys were a Yorkshire family who, after finding a residence at Blyborough in the sixteenth century, attempted to establish a place among the Lincolnshire gentry a little further south, but without much success: the grandsons of Nicholas Cressey seem to have disappeared without trace.

THE ENDOWMENT

it clear that Sir John Nelthorpe intended the Ulceby land to be for the Usher, half the Fulsby land 'purchased of Nicholas Cressey' to provide for the 'poor boys,' and all the remainder to be the Master's. The only stipulation was that before any payments were made to either Master or Usher the revenues must be devoted to the building of the 'one faire Schoolehouse of Bricke' Sir John had in mind; and after the appointments had been made and teaching had begun the Trustees must make the keeping of all the school buildings in good repair a first charge on the rents and profits.

It is not possible to say exactly how much land was left for the endowment of the School: much of it was, of course, in the seventeenth century still in the open fields. But by the beginning of the nineteenth century, no additions having been made as far as is known, the extent of the School's possessions was:

There was then a total area of about 387 acres, divided almost equally, as to extent, between Master and Usher. In quality, however, the Master's part must have been the more valuable. The earliest accounts of money received and paid in connection with the land belong to the late eighteenth century, and show that the Master could not count on getting more than £100 a year in rents† from his 200 acres ; but the Usher appears to have had to rub along on less than half that. In 1789 and in the succeeding years until 1795 he was passing rich on £40 a year. Prices of agricultural produce and the consequent value of land had varied considerably during the eighteenth century, and the monetary yield just mentioned seems to have been roughly half as much again as in the early years of the eighteenth century, judging from the figures given in the Speculum Diœceseos in which are recorded the answers to enquiries made in the Arch-deaconries of Lincoln and Stow between 1705 and 1723 by Bishops Wake and Gibson. For the parish of Wrawby it is there stated that there was a ' charity school ' to which was attached a stipend of £90 to £100 a year. These figures are repeated in answer to later enquiries made by bishops up to 1784,³⁴ though it is doubtful if any attempts were made after the first entry to make sure that the figures were still correct. It is almost certain that the figures cover the salary received by the Master, the amount allowed for the boys from Legsby, and the Usher's salary. Agricultural prices were very low at the beginning of the eighteenth century, except for famine years like 1709. The average price of wheat from 1704 to 1770 never rose above 23/-.³⁵ The fact that Lincolnshire's population is said to have been smaller in 1740 than in 1700³⁶ may indicate how unprosperous agriculture was during that period. There is some difficulty in reconciling the figures available for the School property during these years. The Legsby Register contains this entry : ' Two boys may be sent to

*The Ulceby lands, according to the Indenture of Lease and Release of 1676, consisted of three farms, occupied by Robert Smith, Susanna Foster, widow, and John Wover. With them went the claim to one-fifth part of a manor in Ulceby.

†It is true that when the Trustees advertised for applications for the Mastership (in the Stamford Mercury) in 1787, they stated that 'the Endowment of the School is of the Value of One hundred and twenty pounds a year and upwards'. But presumably they wished to represent the post as favourably as possible.

Brig School from Legsby and these two boys this present year 1712 the scl master of the School is to Maintain . . . and the Schoolmaster of Brig hath 24 li yearly paid out of the ferme in Fullesby.'³⁷ But in 1718 in answer to Bishop Gibson's questions the Vicar of Legsby replied :³⁸ ' Sir John Nelthorpe . . . left Trustees to provide Lodging . . . for two poor boys at Brigg School . . . The Land is about 40 l. per Annum.' It seems hardly likely that the yield of the estates would have risen so much and the figure may be merely a guess. If we assume £24 to be the correct figure, then, going by the figures accepted by the Charity Commissioners in 1837³⁹ which showed that the income intended for the Legsby boys was about two-thirds of the remaining income of the Master,* the latter's stipend in 1712 can have been only £36. That would mean also that the Usher's salary was £30.

To build and keep in repair the school, see that it was run in accordance with the terms of the will, and give general oversight to the estates, Sir John Nelthorpe appointed four Trustees. Their work in addition to these necessary tasks included the choosing of the ' poor boys ' from Fulsby and Legsby and the examining of both buildings and scholars. Twice a year in the second weeks of April and October one or more of them must go to the School and conduct an examination of the pupils, at the same time making good any defects in the building. Recognizing that of the four Trustees only one lived in Lincolnshire, and he not remarkably near to Brigg, Sir John permitted them to find a substitute to act for them.

An unusual limitation imposed by the will concerned the Master. Sir John announced unequivocally that his ' mind and will ' was that no Master should be allowed to remain at his post after he had reached the age of forty-five.† No such condition was laid down for the Usher, of whose work and status perhaps Sir John did not hold any high opinion — understandably in view of the remark of an early eighteenth century writer⁴⁰ that there were too many ignorant Undertakers and unskilful Pretenders ' in our Profession '. ' When a man has try'd all Shifts, and still fail'd . . . he makes his last recourse . . . , [and] sets up for a Teacher of Writing and Arithmetic.' What it was expected the dispossessed but unsuperannuated Master would do can only be guessed ; but as he would very likely be a clergyman it would be always open to him to retire to a living.

*The figures in 1837 were £99 for the Legsby boys and £140 12s. for the Master.

†It must be remembered that in the seventeenth century the expectation of life at birth was only thirty-five years. (English Historical Review, VIII. 3, p. 285.)

in Gainsborough : ' my house in Gainsbrough for which I pay to Sir William Hickman, Baronett, fourepence yearly, and whercof there is nyne hundred yeares and upwards yet to come '.*

There was ample justification for this provision as the Trustees were bound to be kept busy for some time making sure that the will was carried out. In addition to their work in connection with the School certain other tasks were imposed on them, tasks which exemplify Sir John's piety and, in particular, his belief in the value of the sermon. He left his ' Tythes of Markett Rasin ' — i.e. the Rectory of Market Rasen — for the maintenance of a ' Minister to preach a weekly Sermon every Lord's Day in the afternoone ' in the Parish Church of Market Rasen. Similarly his tithes of beans and peas in Barrow were to maintain a minister who should preach a sermon in the Parish Church at Barrow every Sunday afternoon. And his ' Tythe Hay ' in Bleasby was to be used for a minister to preach a weekly sermon, every Lord's day in the afternoon, in Legsby Parish Church.

The four Trustees named in the will were Richard Bettison of Hatton Garden, Holborn, Vincent Amcotts of Nettleham, Lincolnshire, George Evelyn of Hunterscombe (or Huntercombe), Burnham, Buckinghamshire, and ' the Right Honourable George Lord Eure '. Bettison was obviously a London friend of Sir John Nelthorpe and he may have had Lincolnshire connections, though it is difficult to trace them.† He is one of the phantom figures who are glimpsed only for a moment as they steal through the annals of the School.

Vincent Amcotts belonged to a family which had been settled in Lincolnshire since the thirteenth century, originally in the Isle of Axholme and later, in the seventeenth century, at Harrington.⁴¹ Canon A. R. Maddison in his Lincolnshire Pedigrees (p. 17) identifies Vincent Amcotts of Harrington with the Vincent Amcotts of Nettleham mentioned in the will. Presumably it is he who is the subject of a Pardon granted by Charles II in 1660, ' in pursuance of the gracious declaration of his most Excellent Majesty . . . under his Signe and Privy Signett at his courte at Brede '. Vincent Amcotts (described in the pardon as ' of Gray's Inn ') had clearly like Sir John Nelthorpe taken the side of Parliament during the recent troubles ; now he made his declaration of submission and loyalty.⁴²

George Evelyn, despite an apparent absence of any footing in Lincolnshire, was to have the longest connection with the School;

*Sir John must have been relying on memory when he wrote this, as an old ' Schedule of Title Deeds . . . relating to Estates . . . of the Trustees ' mentions an Indenture of 31 May 1604 whereby Sir William Hickman granted a lease of 2000 years on the property referred to.

†But both he and Vincent Amcotts were named as trustees for John Nelthorpe's Lincolnshire property in 1662. (Gaze: op. cit.).

and he was careful to carry out the terms of the Trust up to his last years. He belonged to a family which has since become very widespread, and was in the fifteenth, sixteenth, and seventeenth centuries well-established in Middlesex and Surrey, its most famous member being John Evelyn the diarist, author of Sylva, and one of the founders of the Royal Society. George Evelyn of the will and John Evelyn were cousins* and were both descended from George Evelyn (1526-1603) of Kingston, Long Ditton, Godstone, and Wotton, who possessed the gunpowder monopoly on which the fortunes of the family are said to have been largely founded.⁴³ George Evelyn's father, also named George, had deserted Surrey for Buckinghamshire, where he bought Huntercombe ('in the parish of Burnham'). When he died in 1657 he left his manor of Huntercombe to his wife Dudley Evelyn, with remainder to their eldest son George. Three years later she died leaving a will (dated 28th November, 1660)⁴⁴ making small bequests to her son Thomas and her brothers Thomas and Edward Balls, 'the poor widow Rylett £5, and to her innocent child £10 to help to keep it,' 'to the poor of Burnham £5,' and the residue to George. She had in an earlier will made many more bequests to other near relations but had altered the will in favour of George because 'your losses have been so great'. If the losses had been incurred as a result of his royalist proclivities during the Commonwealth period (he was too young to have taken an active part in the Civil War, not having been born till 1630), then his friendship with Sir John Nelthorpe must have endured in spite of political differences. He died on the 26th April, 1699, aged 69 and was buried at Burnham. His son William (born 3rd October, 1667) sold Huntercombe and built a mansion at Martyr Worthy in Hampshire; when he died in 1723 the Huntercombe Evelyns died out.

Whatever the ties which bound George Evelyn and John Nelthorpe, there seems little doubt that it was the Commonwealth and Protectorate which brought together the latter and George, sixth Lord Eure.† The Eures were a Durham family of some importance in the sixteenth century. Sir William Eure, after being knighted at Tournai in 1513, had held various high offices in the North and had become 'one of the Council of England' before he died in 1548.⁴⁵ He was the first Lord Eure. Both he and his son could be considered staunch royalists, both fighting for their King and the son being killed while so doing. The tradition of loyalty to the Crown was carried on in the seventeenth century by the son of the fourth Lord Eure who died fighting for Charles

*See Appendix B.

†Sir Henry Maxwell-Lyte is quoted by the editors of the Complete Peerage, 1926, Vol. V, p. 179, as claiming that the spelling of the name had in the sixteenth Century been 'Ewrey' or 'Ewrye'; and an earlier form of the name is given (op. cit. . . . p. 179) as Evers.

I at Marston Moor.⁴⁶ It was with a younger branch of the family that treason crept in. George Eure was descended from a younger son of the second peer. His sympathies were indubitably Parliamentary.* He sat as a member representing Yorkshire in 'Barebone's Parliament,' 1653, and for the North Riding in the Parliaments of 1654-5 and 1657-8. In 1653 he had been a member of the Council of State. He also held a command in the Commonwealth army.⁴⁷ It was ironical that the peerage should have descended to him,† but unfortunate that with the peerage the family estates did not come down. He made an attempt to obtain them in 1652 when he became the sixth Lord Eure, but failed. By 1652 the word 'treason' had come to wear a different significance from what it had had before the execution of Charles I, and in one of the lists of persons whose estates were forfeited for treason (to the Commonwealth) appears the name of William, fifth Lord Eure.⁴⁸ George, the new holder of the title, put forward a claim to the family estates in October, 1652, as one who had always been a Protestant and who had been engaged in Parliament's service since the beginning of the war.⁴⁹ But a counter claim was put in on behalf of the two daughters of the William Eure who had lost his life at Marston Moor, as Protestants also, and the rightful heirs.⁵⁰ Their claim in the end was established.

There is an acid reference to the sixth Lord Eure in The Second Narrative of the Late Parliament:⁵¹ 'A gentleman of Yorkshire, not very bulky or imperious for a Lord; he was once well-esteemed of for honesty, and therefore chosen to be one of the Little Parliament; hath also been of all the Parliaments since. The Yorkshire men haply may like his being new Lorded, and that he should have a Negative Voice over them, the rather because they never chose him to any such Thing. The Protector being so well satisfied with his Principles, and Easiness . . . to be wrought upon to do whatever their Will and Pleasure is, and to say, No, when they would have him; it is very meet he also pass for one to be taken out of the house, not only over Yorkshire, but all the good People of the Commonwealth beside, being a Lord of the old Stamp already.'

He was clearly Sir John Nelthorpe's closest friend. In his will Sir John declared that if his nephew Goddard, to whom most of the possessions other than those devised as the School's endowment were assigned, died having no male heir, then all this property should go to Lord Eure and his heirs. And finally Lord Eure, 'my ever honoured friend,' was named as executor of the will and was to have all Sir John's property not mentioned in the will and remaining after all debts and expenses had been paid. Whatever he inherited in this way, he did not live long to enjoy : he died (a bachelor like his friend) in 1672.*

Mr Gillett adds that the payment referred to was made by Drayner Massingberd [1615-1689] of South Ormsby, and Mr Whitting notes that earlier John Banks appears as buying cattle at Lincoln fair and generally on work of trust, his wages being £6 p.a.

WHEN the Trustees sat down to consider how best to carry out the intention of Sir John Nelthorpe, they had first to determine the size of the proposed school. Charles Hoole, whose hopeful views on schoolmasters' salaries have already been noted, had indicated what he regarded as an ideal schoolhouse — ' a large and stately building, placed by it selfe about the middle of the outside of a town . . . not far from the fields. It should have a large picce of ground adjoyning to it '.⁵² The Nelthorpe Trustees could provide the open, airy space, but the building Hoole had in mind was quite beyond their range. He thought in terms of five hundred scholars housed in a building three storeys high, with a ' faire pleasant Gallery wherein to hang Maps ' and with a school Library. The total population of Brigg and the villages nearby, both those which were entitled to send children for free classical education and others which might have availed themselves of the more general elementary type, cannot have been more than three thousand, judging from the returns collected in the Speculum Diœceseos (1705-1723). Possibly between two and three hundred of these were of school age but the difficulty of travelling regularly to and from school, to say nothing of other obstacles, would prevent more than a fraction of that number from attending. What the Trustees therefore had to provide for was what may be considered an average school — for the seventeenth century — i.e. fifty to at most eighty scholars. And for such a number a school-room fifty to sixty feet long and twenty to twenty-five feet wide⁵³ would suffice. It would need to be a two-storey building (or at least contain a garret) ; and there must be also attached to the schoolroom, the houses of Master and Usher.

Clearly such a building would be expensive, modest though the architectural demands of the seventeenth century teacher were. An approach to a builder eventually revealed that the cost would be £600. At once a difficulty obtruded : where was the money to be found ? The total income of the property devised to the School may, as we have seen already, have been as much as £150 and as little as £90 a year. In the latter case no building could begin for six years or more ; and even the more favourable figure meant a delay of four years. The Trustees need not be regarded as impatient even when they decided that either interval would be too long. And in spite of the will of the founder which made it clear that, with the exception of certain small bequests, all property not specifically left for the School should be settled 'immediately after my decease' upon Goddard Nelthorpe (now Sir Goddard), the nephew of Sir John, they hit upon a device for shortening the interval.

This device would have the effect of making Sir Goddard heir not merely to his uncle's estate but to his educational dream : all the proceeds of all the properties devised were to be collected by the Trustees until sufficient had accumulated to enable the 'faire schoolhouse' to be erected. It is possible that this scheme would have enabled the building to be started several years earlier than in fact it was. But Sir Goddard seems to have been primarily a London lawyer with no special affection for Scawby or Brigg. He is described by Ball in his history of Barton-on-Humber⁵⁴ as living at Barton in 1670 and 1700. He bought, in 1695, the third part of the Manor of Bleasby and Sotby. Perhaps this purchase may rank as an indication of his desire to associate himself with Lincolnshire even though it should tax his resources to the limit. (The wretched vendor had to make frequent application to Sir Goddard for payment of the instalments, which it had been arranged should spread over several years. In 1698 the unfortunate man wrote from Newark where he was held in custody that he would be obliged if £20 could be remitted).⁵⁵ But in view of the fact that when Goddard died a few years later (1703) he left some thousands of pounds in addition to his lands, his dilatoriness in satisfying his creditors may be considered to have sprung less from an expensive regional patriotism than from a human reluctance to be parted from his money. But Sir Goddard had his roots mainly in London, where he bought a good deal of property : in Eastcheap, for example, where he built St. James's Coffee House, and in St. Martin's-in-the-Field.⁵⁶ The only evidence of any connection he had with Brigg was the leasing of the White Lion Inn* there to Peter Baldwin in 1686. Sir Goddard was, then, unlikely to accede willingly or graciously to the Trustees' proposal. The result was a suit in Chancery in 1670.†

This suit was brought by Sir Goddard against Eure, Bettison, Amcotts, and Evelyn on the 21st of June of that year. The Trustees pleaded⁵⁷ in their answer that the entire estate had been vested in them 'for the more expeditious compleating and spedier defraying the charges' which must necessarily be expended upon

*On the site now occupied by the Midland Bank.

†Sir Goddard had already challenged the granting of the administration of the will to Lord Eure when the latter proved it the 3rd Oct., 1669, at Exeter House in the Strand. But by a final decree issued there a week later his objection was set aside.

the erecting of the said ' Schoolhouse ' and which ' otherwise these defendants have cause to doubt will be for severall yeares retarded if noe larger proportion of the profittes of the said estate be therein expended than what is allotted to the said Trustees for the single indowment thereof after such erection of the said Schoole '. As might have been expected the decree of the Court, on 1st July, 1670, went in favour of Sir Goddard. The Court pointed out⁵⁸ that the Will laid down a succession of events : the conveying to Sir Goddard of the manor of Legsby and the rest of his inheritance,* then the building of the school, and finally the establishment of the lectureships at Barrow, Market Rasen, and Legsby. Accordingly the Trustees were ordered to join in a conveyance and settle on Sir Goddard all the property bequeathed to him.

While Sir Goddard Nelthorpe had been bringing his suit in Chancery, the Trustees had themselves been engaged in another against Edward Nelthorpe, Sir John's eldest brother. The purpose of this action was to prove the will and compel Edward Nelthorpe to join with the Trustees in settling the lands intended for the School's endowment as laid down in the will. As a trust was involved it was a matter for the Court of Chancery and not the Courts of Common Law. It had to be decided whether such a trust as Sir John Nelthorpe proposed to set up was void under the Mortmain Acts. If the Court should decide it was void, the trust would be for the Heir-at-law (in this case Edward Nelthorpe, eldest brother of the testator). It was therefore necessary to make him a party in order to decide that he took no benefit on the grounds that the trust was contrary to law. It seems to have been largely a matter of form, and on 1st July, 1670, the Court ordered Edward Nelthorpe to join with the Trustees in carrying out the provisions of the will.⁵⁹

Accordingly he and they appointed as Trustees for the lands devised to the School three local men : Sir William Hickman, Sir Stephen Anderson, and Sir Edward Ayscough.⁶⁰

They represented some of the most important families in this part of the county. The Hickmans were the newest comers to Lincolnshire. They seem to have been an Oxfordshire family in the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries and had not established themselves at Gainsborough until the end of Elizabeth's reign. The first of the family to be described as ' of Gainsborough ' in A. R. Maddison's *Lincolnshire Pedigrees*⁶¹ is Sir William who married the daughter of Lord Willoughby of Parham ; he died in 1625. His son Willoughby (1604-1650) had been created baronet in 1643, but had had his troubles during the difficult Civil War period : he was unfortunate in having to live in disputed territory. At the beginning of the Civil War Gainsborough was held for the King but in July, 1643, was seized for Parliament by Lord Willoughby of Parham. Nearly three years later Sir Willoughby Hickman was ordered by Parliament as a 'delinquent' to pay £1,100. He protested that he had never been in arms against Parliament but all he succeeded in doing was having his fine reduced by £200.⁶² It was his son, Sir William Hickman of Gainsborough, the second baronet, who now in 1670 became connected with the Nelthorpe foundation at Brigg.

The Andersons* claimed to have Lincolnshire connections going well back into the sixteenth century,⁶³ the most illustrious member of the family having been Sir Edmund Anderson of Broughton, Lord Chief Justice of Common Pleas, 1582-1605. His grandson, Stephen Anderson had, says de la Pryme, 'been a great loyalist' in Charles I's days and had been almost ruined by his efforts to aid the King, 'altho' he had a vast estate'. He had been compelled to pay nearly £750 to compound for his estate in 1649; even so he got off lightly as his fine had been set in 1646⁶⁴ at £2,890. He claimed, however, that he had never taken command in the Civil War, but merely lived in a garrison for security and had lived peaceably since 1646.⁶⁵ Perhaps the Protector took pity on him in consideration of his debt, to say nothing of his wife and ten children. After the Restoration his son reaped the reward for his father's loyalty, when he was created a baronet in 1664. This son was the Sir Stephen Anderson of Manby associated with Sir William Hickman and Sir Edward Ayscough in 1670. Sir Stephen was a young man: he is described⁶⁶ as being twenty-eight years old in 1673. The choice of a young man for so great a responsibility is doubtless to be explained by the need for Trustees who could be expected to continue to act for another thirty or forty years. In fact Sir Stephen appears to have acted as Trustee until he died in January 1707/8.

Sir Edward Ayscough of South Kelsey was even younger if indeed the young man born in November, 1650 is the one referred to in the Decree in the Court of Chancery of 1st July, 1670. He was not knighted until 1671,⁶⁷ but the designation 'Sir Edward' may have occurred accidentally, the consequence of his having the same Christian name as his father who had been knighted in 1660 and who had died only in 1668. In one sense the inclusion of an Ayscough with the son of the indubitably royalist Stephen Anderson and the son of the suspect royalist Hickman is curious. The Ayscoughs had taken the side of Parliament against Charles I.† One Sir Edward who died in 1654 had represented Lincolnshire in the Long Parliament, taking an active part in opposing *Abraham de la Pryme describes them (1696) as 'a worthy and honourable family, great lovers of the church, and of unity and peace'. (Diary: Surtees Soc. LIV. p 117).

†Peacock's Lists of Roundheads and Cavaliers gives C[aptain?] Ed. Ayscough as serving with a Troop of Horse under the Earl of Bedford.

Charles I, and his son (another Sir Edward and father of the Edward of the 1670 Chancery Decree) had been a Justice of the Peace in Cromwell's time.⁶⁸ For all that, he was knighted in 1660, a tribute, presumably, to his local importance* rather than to his loyalty to the Stuarts. His son may, even when he was only nineteen, as he was in July, 1670, have given signs of unusual ability. He was only fifty when he died in 1699 but he had held office as Deputy Lieutenant for Lincolnshire, 1680-1681, High Sheriff of Lincolnshire, 1683-1684, and High Steward of Grimsby, 1686. He was also a Commissioner of the Prize Office, 1680-1681.⁶⁹

Once the legal position had been settled the Trustees were able to turn their attention to the school. The three of them, Amcotts, Bettison, and Evelyn (Eure having died in 1672), came to terms with William Catlyn of Hull on 4th July, 1674 over the building of the schoolhouse. It was probably as good a choice of builder as they could have made. It is almost certain† that William Catlyn was a master bricklayer in Hull with first-hand experience of schools and their requirements. He was the brother of John Catlyn, headmaster of Hull Grammar School. Their father, John Catlyn, had an extensive building and contracting business; he had brickyards, sandpits, limekilns outside the north gate of Hull; and he had built the Hull Guildhall in 1634. William Catlyn carried on his father's business. It is suggested he may have known one of the Nelthorpes at Beverley and so got the contract at Brigg, but it may well have been as a result of connections between Brigg and Hull which seem to have been steady and continuous until the middle of the nineteenth century, when the coming of the railway to Brigg caused it to look east and west rather than north. William Catlyn was a person of some importance in Hull: in 1674 he was nominated for the office of Sheriff of Hull. On that occasion he was able to avoid office by pleading that he had commitments in Lincolnshire (undoubtedly the building of Brigg Grammar School). But in 1683 when again nominated, he had to take the office: the alternative was a fine, and a heavy one.‡

Through his brother, the younger John Catlyn, he could hardly have failed to know a good deal about schools. John Catlyn was a character. He had been at Cambridge but had left it to fight on the royalist side in the Civil War. After that he had wielded a trowel in the family business (as he himself explained in Latin).⁷⁰ Then in 1661 he obtained the (barely-remunerative) post of usher at Hull Grammar School, and by 1664 had become headmaster. For twelve years (until he was finally ousted) he not only ruled the school but did a good deal to restore the old building. If he employed the services of his brother in this work, William Catlyn must have had a good idea of what Amcotts, Evelyn, and Bettison wanted, and should have been in a position to guide their efforts.

The contract he and they drew up* provided for a building sixty-five feet long outside (from east to west), and forty feet wide outside. It is a valuable document both as an illustration of the building practice of the time and as proof that the school building in use in the 1870s was the same as had been put up two hundred years earlier except for outbuildings and odd extensions (some of them, it seems, very odd, to judge by the report on the state of the building by James Fowler of Louth, 12th December, 1878⁷¹ : these had been made on the north side and affected only the Master's and Usher's dwellings). But without the plan which originally accompanied the contract we cannot hope accurately and completely to reconstruct the building. The articles of agreement do not even state the width of the schoolroom. They lay down that it shall be forty-eight feet long and make it clear that it is to occupy the south-west corner of the whole building. But it is only by inspection of the building as it is now that we learn that the schoolroom must have been eighteen feet wide. At the east end of the school, taking up the whole forty feet of the width and an unspecified area of the north half of the building was the house eventually occupied by the Master. What was left of the north side was to be the Usher's house. So much is clear from the plan submitted with their report on the old buildings by Goddard and Sons, of Lincoln (26th January, 1878), to the newly-established body of Governors : the south wall, they found, was eighteen inches thick, the east and north and the longitudinal middle walls fourteen inches thick. These measurements would correspond to what was laid down in Catlyn's contract — ' two bricks in length thick ' for the south side and west end walls ; the other walls, including ' the partition walls between the School and dwelling houses ' ' one brick and an half in length thick '.

It is nowhere stated in the indenture which house was to be the Master's and which the Usher's, although it is to be presumed that the Master's dwelling would be larger and more desirable. The only suggestion of different treatment for the Master is to be found in the directions given to Catlyn about the stairs : the stairs in ' the house intended for the Master ' were to have ' railles and turned banisters '.

There is also, unfortunately, no indication whatever of the division of the houses into the 'roomes, studyes, and closetts' mentioned in the contract. Goddard's report of 1878, however, speaks of sitting rooms and kitchens on the north and east sides of the original building. The kitchens were probably originally next to one another in the middle of the north side, near where was (until only a few years ago) a well in the yard.*

The building was to be two storeys high, each storey being eight feet six inches high; but the schoolroom itself, although seventeen feet high, was to be built in one storey. Above the whole of the houses and schoolroom were to run garrets, half a storey in height, lit by dormer windows. (Here was to be accommodation for boarders and servants—not always distinguishable, it will be later observed, in the eighteenth and nineteenth centuries). Six large windows were provided for in the school: 'the said house' was allowed fourteen windows in each storey; each 'outer window of the lower storeys' must have iron bars, and all other windows wooden bars. Both houses were furnished with 'two paire of staires' not less than three feet wide, and, if possible, as much as three feet six inches. The whole building was to be covered (as it still is) with a double roof with a guttering running the length of the building between the twin roofs, and a door opening out of the garrets on to the guttering. As can be seen from the details of the indenture the building was a substantial one (though, as was to be remarked by a somewhat condescending nineteenth century Charity Commission official, 'not uncomely')†; and Goddard noted in 1878 that the walls and main timbers of floors and roofs were sound, after standing for two hundred years.

Eighteenth century sketches and a mid-nineteenth century photograph of the School show features conforming closely to the 1674 indenture's terms, except that the six chimneys Catlyn was required to provide do not show. The sole chimney, looming large on the eighteenth century representations, is a very plain, utilitarian affair, and, it is to be hoped, not an original feature.

The date which was carved on a 'handsome fair table of good fine stone' over the main door was 1674 but that was merely the date when the indentures were drawn and signed and the building was begun. Catlyn undertook to finish the work by the 11th November, 1675 and as he was to have a gratuity of £20 over and above the agreed price of £600 when he had finished the job to the satisfaction of the Trustees he should have had a strong incentive to finish on time. Whether he did or not it is difficult to say.

*The plan prepared by Goddards of Lincoln seems to make it plain that the kitchens and sitting room on the north side were adapted as class rooms after 1877, and that the principal dividing walls between them are those which remain to-day.

†James Fowler's 1878 Report on the buildings describes the fabric as 'of a very interesting style of work.'

'The Counterpart of an intended appointment of Mr. Banks of South Ormsby to be Usher of Brigg School,' dated 22nd March, 1678⁷² has the sentence . . . 'the said Schoolhouse and dwelling-house is now almost finished'. (There is no surviving document to enable the appointment of the first Master to be pin-pointed, though he appears to have been nominated before 1680). In that year (1680) the actual appointment of an Usher was made, on the 9th March; but the 'said Schoolhouse and Dwelling-house' were still only 'almost finished'.⁷³ And not until the 29th November, 1681, in the indenture of the appointment of the Lecturer at Barrow⁷⁴, is there any statement that the building was 'now finished'.

It seems odd that both Master and Usher should have been appointed so long ahead of the completion of building, but it can hardly be doubted that the Trustees had delayed the appointments of Lecturers at Barrow, Market Rasen, and Legsby (see Appendix A) until the School was complete, in the meantime allocating to the School their entire revenue from the Trust estates. The cost of decorating and furnishing the School cannot have been heavy. Schoolrooms in the seventeenth century were simple to the point of severity. But as, once Master and Usher were appointed, they would immediately begin to receive and apply to their own use the revenues from their respective estates, the Trustees may have had, for the finishing of the school, only the Lectureship revenues, and that might explain the delay.

The schoolhouse thus erected has for long been the most interesting building, architecturally and historically, in the town.* Strictly speaking it was not in the town then as that consisted only of houses on both sides of the Market Place and along Wrawby Street and Bigby Street (for only a fraction of their modern length), together with houses on the courts running off Wrawby Street. But it was sufficiently near to be reckoned a feature of Brigg and one of several additions and improvements to the town at the end of the seventeenth century. In 1665 a new bridge had been placed over the Ancholme where the modern County Bridge stands. It was described in 1827⁷⁵ as one without 'perhaps its equal in the county for danger,' presumably because of its narrowness;† but it must have been considered an advance on its predecessor. Two other buildings of importance were put up before 1700: the Chapel of Ease,‡ which stood on the site of Brigg Parish Church, and the Friends' Meeting House (at the back of what is now 63, Wrawby Street). Both were of red brick and had no pretensions to beauty. The Meeting House has long decayed and a bare shell remains. The Chapel remained until it was pulled down in 1841. The editor of Abraham de la Pryme's Diary slights it as 'a very mean room'. It was small, its bell (which rang to prayers every day at 11.00 a.m.) lacked sonority and mellowness, its clock (at any rate in the early nineteenth century) was usually very fast or very slow, but it cared for the long-neglected spiritual needs of Brigg. And it provided an addition to the stipend of the Master of Brigg Grammar School during the eighteenth and part of the nineteenth centuries.

* Abraham de la Pryme notes in his Diary (27th September 1697): 'There is a pretty school-house at Brigg, but not very well situate, nor very well contrived.' (Surtees Edition, p. 151).

† When the modern County Bridge was built in 1828, the date '1665' was 'found in the dovetail framing of the woodwork under the masonry of the old bridge.' (Lincoln, Rutland and Stamford Mercury, 13th June, 1828).

The first Master, departed before 1700, did not benefit. He was the Reverend Nathanael Taylor. Regrettably little is known about him, though some comfort can be found in the existence of an engraving showing him with his pupils in 1684. It is in the possession of the Spalding Gentlemen's Society Museum, in a volume of Lincolnshire engravings collected for Sir Joseph Banks. On the back of the engraving is written in ink: 'A Facsimile Copy from the Original (said to be unique) in the collection of Sir William Musgrave, Bart. John Brand f. Jany. 1792.'⁷⁶ The present whereabouts of the original engraving, if, indeed, it survives, is unknown. Sir William Musgrave, who died 3rd January, 1800, had a large collection of English portraits. After his death they were sold by auction by 'Mr. Richardson at his House, No. 31, the Corner of Villiers-Street. in the Strand.' In the British Museum Department of Prints and Drawings (to whose Keeper I am indebted for this information about Musgrave and Brand) there is a Catalogue of this sale in the February and March of 1800. It contains the entry (p. 146, 15th day) '80. Nathaniel Taylor, M.A. 1684, master of the grammar school at Brig, in Lincolnshire, 1684 — rare, not in Bromley . . .' The name of the original artist is not given, but John Christian Brand, painter and engraver was born in 1722 or 1723 in Vienna. He was taught by his father, and became Professor of the Imperial Academy at Vienna in 1770; his reputation was based mainly on his landscape paintings. He died in 1795 at Vienna.

Nathanael Taylor in this engraving recalls the illustration from Comenius's Orbis Sensualium Pictus:⁷⁷ the Master sits in a high-backed chair with arms; he wears a hat and a gown; before him stands a boy under instruction; other scholars sit 'in forms' — i.e. also on forms, one form behind another. There is, however, in Taylor's case, no birch or 'fearsome ferula' at hand. Only thirteen boys appear in the Brigg illustration; they may be taken to be the upper school. (It is not possible to say with any certainty where in the Schoolroom the Master is sitting. The curtain on the wall behind him suggests the main door from which draughts are being excluded; but one would perhaps expect him to teach at the end near his own house — i.e. on the other (or east) side of the door.)

Although some artist evidently thought highly of Taylor, he was a very minor celebrity. Only a few years after the engraving in which he figures was sold there appeared this comment on it :⁷⁸ NATHANIEL TAYLOR, A M 1684, after D.D. small 8vo. whole length, in a clerical habit, broad-brimmed hat, sitting in his school with the boys.

‘ Nathaniel Taylor, master of the free Grammar School at Brigg, in Lincolnshire, was author of a visitation sermon on the 6th verse of Psalm CXXII printed in the year 1691, at which time he was a doctor of divinity. Instructors of youth are so eminently useful to the public, that one cannot help regretting that the privacy of their station in general affords them but little opportunity of being known to the world with advantage : it cannot be expected, as Dr. Taylor’s contemporaries have not noticed him, that, at the distance of more than a century, anything can be collected of him but what he has told of himself ; a title-page, like a parish register, is too frequently the only record of an ingenious person’s having existed.’

The paucity of information about Nathanael Taylor is the more awkward as there were other contemporary men bearing the same name and it is not easy always to pick out the important man. Our Nathanael Taylor, however, appears to have been a Cambridge man. Venn⁷⁹ gives a Nathaniel Taylor who was admitted sizar at Trinity College, Cambridge on 3rd September, 1667, matriculated 1667/8, took his B.A. degree 1671/2 and the M.A. in 1675, and was ordained successively deacon at Lincoln on 19th March, 1670/1, and priest (at Peterborough) on 3rd March, 1671/2. His name is not among those of the deacons ordained by the Bishop of Lincoln on 19th March, 1670/1.⁸⁰ And the (admittedly cautious) addition to the entry given by Venn : ‘ One of these names of Nicholas Lane, London, clerk ; died May 1702 ; will (P.C.C.) 1702 ’ leads to further suspicion, as the signature on the will is assuredly not that of the first Master of Brigg Grammar School. An entry in the Liber Cleri,⁸¹ however, runs : ‘ Mr. Nath. Taylor vicar [of Hibaldstow] presbyter 3 tio. martio 1671 per Josephum Petriburgensem Episcopum.’ As the Brigg Taylor became vicar of Hibaldstow in 1689 this entry seems to link him up with Venn’s Taylor.*

If he is our man we can say he must have been twenty-four or five years of age when the building of the School was begun, and possibly thirty when he started to teach in the School, with a prospect of a run of a further fifteen years. He left just before the end of this permitted span, and, is to be presumed, when a suitable opening offered elsewhere. Before he went he had augmented his income and done something to prepare for the future when he obtained the living at Hibaldstow on the death of the previous incumbent. He was presented to the living by the Dean and Chapter of Lincoln, instituted by the Bishop of Lincoln (Barlow) 9th October, and inducted 28th October, 1689.⁸² He was still vicar at the Visitation in 1693 but after that he disappears—as Vicar. He was, however, still 'Master of Brigg School' at the end of 1693, as a dedicatory epistle addressed to George Evelyn in a manuscript 'Manual for members of the Church of England. The Second Part' shows.⁸³

*It is just possible that he was the Nathaniel Taylor who matriculated at Pembroke College, Oxford, at the age of eighteen in 1675, but he would have been very young to take charge of the School in 1680.

Taylor speaks in this dedication of the many years he has under Evelyn's Trust been Master of Brigg School, possibly to bring to Evelyn's notice that his time as Master was nearly done and to turn the sole surviving Trustee's thoughts towards rewards due to a faithful servant. It may be noticed in passing that the letter indicates a high regard in both Taylor and Evelyn for their Church — 'the best of churches whose cause I here endeavour to manage, and however slighted at home is admired by all other Reformed Churches'. Taylor's zeal led him to complete the Manual already referred to, an exercise book with fifty-eight pages, each of up to forty-seven lines of writing, containing a 'body of Devotion digested under their respective heads'. He also wrote a book⁸⁴ (about half the size of the Manual) called 'A Catechism for Children,' 'A brief and yet plain exposition of the Catechism of the Church of England adapted to children's capacity to be learned after they can say the Church Catechism'. This too is in manuscript: in an age of felicitously expressed devotion Taylor's contributions aroused little notice.

As he fades from our view a wide obscurity settles on the next few years of the School's history. Abraham de la Pryme's Diary may have a revealing gleam of light: on 25th June, 1697 the Broughton curate records,⁸⁵ 'I had sent a letter to Mr. Brown, schoolmaster of Brigg (now preferred to three livings in Ireland by the Bishop of Clogher), to desire his company, but he was pre-engaged, and so writt unto me.' This Mr. Brown may have been Taylor's successor. If so he evidently made no attempt to stay his full course, understandably as three livings, even in Ireland, may well have outweighed in his eyes the advantages offered by a small school in the wilds of Lincolnshire. It has, of course, to be remembered that there had been schoolmasters in Brigg before the foundation of the Grammar School and there may still have been men running private schools. Brown may have been one of these. Until the Rev. James Cook comes on the scene in the early years of the next century there can be no certainty as to the name of the Master.

Only one of the early Ushers can be named and observed. Ushers were a nomadic part of the population in the seventeenth century, badly paid and constantly seeking a more rewarding post. (Of the usher might almost be said something like the Saki dictum on cooks : he was a good usher as ushers go, and as ushers go, he went.) At any rate the first Usher appointed to the post at Brigg never functioned. On 22nd March, 1678, 'the said Schoolhouse and dwelling house [being] now almost finished,' Amcotts and Evelyn appointed John Bankes of South Ormsby usher, bailiff, and receiver during their pleasure. The document recording this appointment is marked, 'Counterpart of an intended appointment of Mr. Banks . . . to be Usher of Brigg School.'). Nevertheless the Usher at Brigg should have been more stable because more adequately recompensed. William Barrett, appointed on 9th March, 1680, is described as 'late of Barton . . . Philomath'.⁸⁶ (In other words he had no university qualification, though that need not have made him the worse schoolmaster.) He certainly stayed at Brigg* until June, 1684 as is attested by letters he wrote to Sir Thomas Meres 1683-1684⁸⁷.

These letters arose out of a job he had been offered. Ushers commonly accepted employment outside their academic work to eke out their salaries, and for such work as surveying an estate they represented a valuable source of casual but competent labour. Sir Thomas Meres, M.P. for Lincoln much of the time between 1660 and 1708† became involved in a prolonged dispute with Lord Irwin over a claim which the latter made to manorial rights in Scotton⁸⁸ where Meres had an estate. As part of the process of defending his claim Meres wished to have a map of Scotton drawn and Barrett was recommended to him as a suitable surveyor and cartographer. Barrett (signing himself with a wealth of flourishes to demonstrate his skill with a pen) undertook in March, 1683⁸⁹ to accomplish the work satisfactorily 'by God's assistance, the help of my apprentice and a man to lead the chain'. He proposed to 'take the outlines, and quantity of angles by a semi-circle and prove the same by subtended lines,' to survey the area 'by the plain table, and prove them by diagonal lines,' to map everything with the use of colours, displaying Meres' coat of arms and all the usual embellishments ; and all for 2½d. an acre. He seems to have had difficulties. In a letter written toward the end of 1683⁹⁰ he complained that he had had to bear all the expenses of labour, travel, and 'also of one to supply my place in the school' during his absence, all of which had cost him between £14 and £15. But the matter was adjusted to his satisfaction, judging by a later letter from him to Meres.⁹¹

*As late as 1724 it was found at Lincoln that 'a deserving man' would not accept the post of master of the Grammar School 'under a salary of £50.' (Victoria County History of Lincolnshire, II. p. 446). At Louth Grammar School the usher received £20 p.a. at the end of the seventeenth century. (Ibid. p. 466). (The Usher's salary at Brigg may have been half as much again as that.) At Beverley Grammar School in 1678 the usher was paid £10 p.a. — and that represented an increase on his former salary. (J. Lawson in Studies in Education, II, 3, p. 372).

†He was a busy but not too successful politician in the Restoration period, with somewhat uncertain political leanings later. (J. W. F. Hill, Tudor and Stuart Lincoln, pp. 184-185).

Of the boys who learned and possibly lived in the School during its first years hardly anything can be said. Venn has an entry⁹² showing that James Nelthorpe, who was admitted at Jesus College, Cambridge on 1st June, 1688, was at Brigg Grammar School under Nathanael Taylor* ; doubtless an extensive examination of Venn's work would reveal others. And the Archivists' Report (Lincolnshire Archives Committee) 1954-1955⁹³ mentions a boy who was to have come to school at Brigg but was fobbed off with an education at Eton instead. He was David Atkinson, the son of the David Atkinson who made in 1703 a bequest of £3 a year to help maintain a minister to preach in the new Chapel of Ease in Brigg every Lord's Day and read prayers there every day.⁹⁴

NOTE:

Mr. J. Lawson (of Hull University) has generously supplied me with further information about the Catlyns, information which, however, I received too late for inclusion in the text:

John Catlyn (the elder) was Warden of the Bricklayers' Company in 1628. He died in 1657 or 1658.

William Catlyn was born in 1628, being baptised in St. Mary, Lowgate, 31st July, 1628. He was admitted freeman by patrimony on 2nd December, 1658 (Freemen's Book f 47) and was chamberlain in 1668-69 (Bench Book vii 163) and Warden of the Bricklayers' Company 1667-68 (Order Book of the Brotherhood of Bricklayers f 56a).

His letter to the bench excusing himself from the shrievalty is dated the 19th September, 1674, and he offers two reasons: (1) he is not well-enough off—his income 'is soe small that I do wonder it comes under publique notice', and (2) 'The next particular to offer is my great undertakings in Lincolnshire: the engagement is soe considerable that I know not how to be absent a day scarce without manifest losse and damage. To these let me add my unfitness for such an office being educated in a manuall Calling . . . These collective reasons among many more; although dropt hastily from my rude pen I hope may prove as effectuell as Apelles pencill did, which often times by inadvertencie gave a better representation of his conceit then happily premeditated Art could have done.' (M344 in the Hull Corporation Records.)

*James Nelthorpe was the son of Richard Nelthorpe of Scawby (1628-1705) and the great-nephew of the founder of the School. He himself sent his son Richard to the School later. He was buried at Scawby in 1756.

To 1787: Through a Glass Darkly

UNTIL the Rev. James Walter becomes Headmaster in 1787 there is a dearth of assured information about the School, its personnel, and even its property. A pall of dead obscurity settles on the eighteenth century history of the School, pierced only here and there by random gleams of light. Even these fitful shafts are occasionally very oblique. The first (known) Headmaster of this period, the Rev. James Cook, appears in no surviving document belonging to the Trustees, but is mentioned in a will dated 28th September, 1712: a headmaster by inference. The second Headmaster, Thomas Waterworth, was given a slightly more solid and direct existence by his nephew who put up a tablet to his memory in Wrawby Church in 1780. Of neither Master can much be said.

The first reference to James Cook appears to have been made by Nicholas Carlisle, writing in, or just before, 1818.⁹⁵ After describing the School he deals with the town and its amenities. Amongst these was the newly-built Chapel-of-Ease,* and Carlisle states that the first minister or Lecturer of this chapel was also Master of the School; 'his name was James Cook—and his right to the appointment [of Lecturer or minister] being disputed by the then Vicar of the Parish in which the Chapel stands, the matter was compromised, and a Bond from the Vicar, dated the 17th October, 1709, was given, by which he binds himself and his Successors never more to molest the said James Cook, or his Successors in the School, from officiating in the Chapel.' (As the Speculum Dioeceseos gives the value of the Wrawby vicarage then as only £25 p.a., the Vicar, the Rev. Lionel Holmes, cannot have found it easy to make the renunciation).

*Abraham de la Pryme (op. cit., pp. 142-143) says the idea of building this chapel arose first with Thomas Place of Winterton 'because that that town [sc. Brigg] being larg. . . . , and having in it all sorts of sectarys, becomes by that means a seminary for all such like cattel the whole country over'. The men responsible for the actual building of the chapel, however, were Atkinson, Jolland, Benson, and Dempster, all of whom also bequeathed property for the benefit of a Lecturer. Canon A. N. Claye's Brigg Church and Town and Lincolnshire Archivists' Report 1954-1955, p. 8). The Bishop of Lincoln consecrated the chapel in 1700. (Lincolnshire Archives, Fac. 10/83).

Next, the Charity Commissioners, in their Report . . . concerning Charities, 1837, give Cook his second inferential claim to the position of Headmaster. Under the heading of 'Chapelry of Glanford Brigg, Endowment of Lecturer'⁹⁶ they give the gist of the will of George Jolland of Brigg, dated 28th September, 1712. By his will he left a cottage at South Kelsey and land at North Kelsey (42 acres altogether) to Robert Elwes, Charles Pelham, Francis Anderson, and their heirs on trust for the endowment of the Chapel at Brigg. And he enjoined them specifically to 'permit and suffer' Mr. James Cooke [sic], schoolmaster of Brigg, and then preaching minister in the chapel, to receive the rents as long as Cook should 'live and read Divine Service according to the Church of England, once everyday in the week and preach once every Sunday in the year'. The difficulty the Vicar of Wrawby had caused three years earlier is then recalled by the injunction to the Trustees of the will that if 'the said James Cooke should be hindered from reading or preaching . . . by the minister of the parish of Wrawby . . . then . . . James Cooke . . . should receive the rents and profits' notwithstanding.

It is clear then that James Cook was Master of the School, but when he was appointed and how long he reigned cannot be stated with accuracy. Foster⁹⁷ merely records of him that he was the son of William Cook of Frolesworth, Leicestershire, that he matriculated at Lincoln College, Oxford 25th March 1691, aged sixteen; that he took his B.A. in 1694, and M.A. in 1698; became Vicar of Redbourne 1708, and Rector of Roxby with Risby 1714. He was presented to the living at Redbourne (not a very valuable one) the 12th August 1708 by the patron, Elizabeth Carter⁹⁸ but he had ceased to hold the living by 1715, and had transferred on 16th June 1714 to Roxby with Risby, of which Robert Elwes* was patron.⁹⁹ That living he vacated by 1727¹⁰⁰. But it is apparent from the Waterworth tablet in Wrawby Church that he had ceased to be Headmaster in 1716. Assuming his age to be correctly stated as sixteen in 1691, he must still have had four years to go before reaching the retiring age of forty-five, but he evidently preferred to go when the living at Roxby fell vacant, even though it was worth 'scarcely £80'.¹⁰¹ (It must be remembered that in the archdeaconries of Lincoln and Stow at the beginning of the eighteenth century 'as many as 550 benefices had an income of less than £100 a year, and of these fully one half had as little as £30 a year or less'.)¹⁰²

Thomas Waterworth who became Master in 1716 was not in orders—alone among the Headmasters from the beginning of the School right up to 1876, a period of two hundred years. The tablet to his memory describes him as a learned and an upright man, and doubtless it was for these qualities that the Trustees appointed him. But it is somewhat startling, all the same, to discover that he was forty-five years old when he was appointed—the age at which he should have retired. Having disregarded the wishes of the founder in this matter the Trustees made no bones about allowing Waterworth to go on until he died. This he did at the age of eighty-seven, worn out, as his tablet says, by schoolmastering as well as by time's corrosion.

Though he was not a parson Waterworth provided for his charges the religious teaching which Sir John Nelthorpe would have desired them to have. In reply to Bishop Gibson's questions in his Visitation in 1718¹⁰³ the Vicar of Wrawby (Christopher Epworth) affirmed that in the endowed free school in his parish about sixty children were 'taught and instructed in the principles of the Christian Religion according to the Doctrine of the Church of England, but never come upon the Weekdays to a Chappel-of-ease in the Town of Brigg, where Prayers are read every day'. And again in 1721¹⁰⁴ he informed the Bishop that care was taken that the scholars under Waterworth were instructed in the principles of the Church of England and brought to church every Sunday.

The Vicar's reply of 1718 is the earliest indication of the size of the school. But of the sixty mentioned the majority were probably receiving only the simplest form of education provided by the foundation. The reply of the churchwardens of Wrawby (John Hunt and William Ogglesby) in 1718¹⁰⁵ that 'the revenues of the Free School are rightly employ'd according to the intentions of the Founder' would suggest that the inhabitants of Brigg, Wrawby, and the immediate district entitled to benefit under the will were in fact receiving the instruction they wanted. It is not likely that the majority of a rural population would have desired a rigidly classical education.

Whatever the feelings of the people of Brigg and Wrawby there is no doubt that one other parish intended to share the benefits provided by the endowment was discontented. The Vicar of Legsby replies to Bishop Gibson's questions in 1718 :¹⁰⁶ 'Sir John Nelthorpe . . . left Trustees to provide Lodging, diet, Cloathing, and books for two poor boys at Brigg School and to be maintained out of the Landes he left at Fulsby The Trustees now have the direction of these benefactions but they teach the Scholars that are sent thither Little or nothing and but one instead of two boys.' This was only the first of a number of complaints which were to be received from Legsby during the next century and more.

The standard of education under Waterworth cannot have been low, at any rate in the upper or classical part of the School. Venn's Alumni Cantabrigienses reveals on a brief, almost random, examination several names of boys from Brigg Grammar School under Waterworth who went to Cambridge. One boy who also bore the name of Waterworth (Thomas, son of Edward Waterworth of Bawtry) was admitted sizar at Trinity College in 1742. He took his degree (B.A.) in 1746, became a Fellow of the College in 1748, and eventually took a Divinity degree in 1761. He had been ordained deacon in 1746 but does not seem to have turned his energies to a parish until 1763. He died in 1790. Henry and John Thorold of Cuxwold were under Waterworth's care at Brigg. The former entered Magdalene College in 1729, became a Fellow of the College, was ordained, and became Rector of Cuxwold, Rector of Ludborough, and Rector of Swallow; the latter (also at Magdalene) took to medicine at the university and settled down later as a physician in Horncastle. As all three lived till nearly the end of the century, Waterworth dying first in 1790, aged (c.) 63, and the Thorolds dying in 1798 aged 90, and 1794 aged 80, respectively, the surroundings amid which they passed their early years at Brigg seem not to have been trying or unhealthy.

But against that evidence must be set the cases of three others: John Thompson, William Jolland, and John Whichcot, who all proceeded to Cambridge from Brigg. Thompson died before he was fifty, Jolland when thirty-five; and Whichcot at the age of forty-eight. All three had become parsons, Thompson at Gayton, Northamptonshire, and Boston, Jolland, it is thought, at Grayingham, and Whichcot at Scotton.

Others who went to Cambridge from Brigg* included William Thompson (Trinity), Stephen Metcalf (Magdalene), and Richard Nelthorpe (St. John's). Richard Nelthorpe is one of the only two members of the founder's family who seem to have taken advantage of the education offered by the School during Waterworth's regime and after. His father, James Nelthorpe, was the nephew of Sir Goddard, and the great-nephew of Sir John Nelthorpe; he lived at Little Grimsby. Richard does not seem to have risen to any eminence. Maddison's Lincolnshire Pedigrees merely records that he was still alive in 1740.¹⁰⁷ There appears to be a connection between Richard Nelthorpe and John Whichcot, though Canon Maddison is cautious about it.¹⁰⁸ Whichcot was the son of Colonel George Whichcot of Harpswell, one of the Members of Parliament for Lincolnshire, 1705-1710. (On the death of his second wife Col. Whichcot had married Frances Katherine,¹⁰⁹ daughter of the Sir Thomas Meres already mentioned above as having estates at Scotton. These estates passed into the possession of the Whichcots, a fact which helps to explain John's later occupation of the living there.) The Nelthorpe pedigree in Maddison's book ¹¹⁰ shows Frances Whichcot, daughter of George Whichcot of Harpswell, and sister of John, as the wife of James Nelthorpe of Little Grimsby. Their son Richard was therefore the nephew of John Whichcot though only nine years separated them. Griffith Nelthorpe who entered St. John's College, Cambridge, from Brigg in 1731 was the other scholar of founder's kin. He was Richard's younger brother.

*Mr. Malcolm Gaze in his MS History of the Nelthorpe Family says that Waterworth sent eight pupils to St. John's, Cambridge, 1724-31. (Chapter 3).

Some of the bills of John Whichcot during the period he was at the School have survived.¹¹¹ On the 7th January, 1720, Thomas Waterworth received of 'Madam Whichcot' £5 for half a year's board for John Whichcot, due on 7th October 1720, and 'for schooling' £3 3s. od. On the 7th April, 1721 these payments were repeated for the half (or term) ended on that date. Similar sums were acknowledged in 1721, and the final account was rendered and met on 26th April, 1723 when Waterworth received 'five pounds in full for Mr. John Whichcot's Board, Scholr and all other Accts'. From this time John Whichcot's bills began to come from Cambridge. Three facts emerge clearly from these bills: the two terms into which the scholastic year was divided ended on the 7th April and 7th October, and the charge for board and lodging in the Master's house was £10 p.a., while tuition in the classics for one living in an unprivileged area cost three guineas a year. One difficulty however obtrudes. According to Maddison¹¹² John Whichcot was baptised in 1702. He must then have been twenty-one when he left Waterworth's hands. He can hardly have been a typical pupil.

Waterworth just breaks into the official records of the School. It is possible that minutes were kept of the meetings the early Trustees must have held, but if so all trace of them has been lost. Most likely the early eighteenth century blight which struck education as well as religion ended whatever good practices and resolutions there may have been among the first Trustees—those who had known Sir John Nelthorpe and shared his enthusiasms. It was not till William Hesleden, a Barton-on-Humber solicitor, became Clerk and Agent to the Trustees in 1787 that records began regularly to be kept (in both senses of the term). Hesleden represented the dawning attitude of the late eighteenth century which contemplated the past with a heightened, though romanticised interest.* It was evidently he who examined the *William Hesleden, born about 1750, was the son of the vicar of Grimsby. He was educated at the old Grimsby Grammar School and after training with his uncle John Bennett, solicitor of Barton-on-Humber, succeeded him in his practice. He was a man 'of classical attainments and studious habits'. (Lincoln, Rutland and Stamford Mercury, 4th April, 1823. It was probably his son, W. S. Hesleden (1777-1852) who sent to the Gentleman's Magazine, on 12th February, 1796, 'a South-west view of the free grammar-school at Glamford Briggs'. He asked to be informed of anything the magazine's readers could tell him about the School's history. Nothing was sent—at any rate to the magazine. The sketch (attributed by the late David Briggs to Thomas Bradley) was reproduced on a School Christmas card a few years ago.

'Oak Box at the Schoolhouse' which is mentioned in a request for counsel's opinion in the year 1818¹¹³. The only minute it contained in addition to the will and a few deeds must have been that of a meeting held on 2nd October, 1758. Eventually* he bought a stout book† bound in parchment and had copied into it all the minutes in his possession and a statement of the accounts from the time he took the responsibility for them. The first entry in the book concerns the meeting of the Trustees held at the 'House of Christopher Fox' in Brigg‡ to consider what action to take on the death of Waterworth. He had died early in December 1757, being buried at Wrawby on the 12th December.¹¹⁴

At this meeting (on 2nd October, 1758) the Rev. John Skelton, Vicar of Goxhill and Thornton-Curtis, was unanimously appointed by the nine Trustees present 'Head Master [of 'Brigg School'] until he shall arrive at the Age of forty-five Years or so long as he shall behave himself well and teach the Languages pursuant to the Directions Given in and by the last Will of Sir John Nelthorpe'. Skelton, born in Wakefield, had been educated at Wakefield Grammar School. From there he had won two scholarships—in 1747 the Cave Scholarship (worth £10 8s. od. a year for seven years, unless the holder proceeded to the degree of M.A. before the end of this period§) and in 1753 the Stone Exhibition (of £20 a year for three years). He entered Clare Hall, Cambridge, took his degree in 1750, and the following year returned to Wakefield Grammar School as an assistant master.¹¹⁵ In 1752 he was ordained deacon at York, and two years later, priest.¹¹⁶ He was now qualified to take charge of a school (though as a Junior Optime at Cambridge he had not distinguished himself academically). He received the livings at Goxhill and Thornton-Curtis in 1754 and retained them until he left Brigg Grammar School; they were, of course, no hindrance in the eighteenth century to his coming to live at Brigg, a town from which neither of his parishes was easily accessible.

Skelton must have brought a little more energy into the conduct of the School. As boys were going from Brigg to the university just before 1780 it is fair to assume that the academic standards of the early part of the century were being maintained, at any rate until his last years. Two boys who went from the School to Oxford were Thomas and Richard Dixon from Riby. They entered the School in 1773 and went subsequently to Oxford

—Thomas on 2nd June, 1778 (at the age of nineteen) to University College, and Richard on 8th March 1779 (aged eighteen) to Corpus Christi College.¹¹⁷ Thomas became Rector of Laceby, and of Stainton-le-Dale, and Vicar of Legsby. He married a wife with property, but he was not a business man and became bankrupt for a time. But as he remained rector till he died in 1832 it is to be presumed that his finances recovered.¹¹⁸ Richard became Rector of Claxby and Normanby. He did not live to see sixty but he was ‘“truly an ornament to his profession and did honour to the name of man”’. As Mr. G. S. Dixon who supplied this information says, ‘Could an epitaph go further?’

The fees for boarding were higher in 1773 than they had been in 1720. The two Dixon boys cost their father £20 a year each, as far as Skelton was concerned (though this may have included the cost of tuition as well as of board); in addition £3 a year was due to the Writing Master; and the washerwoman, Mrs. Newmarch must be paid two guineas a year for washing, and ten shillings a year for mending. Skelton however undertook to supply the boys with threepence a week each as pocket money.¹¹⁹

Skelton remained at Brigg until 1787*. As he had gone to Cambridge in 1746 he cannot have been less than fifty-six or fifty-seven when he retired and may easily have been older. But in this instance the breach of the rule concerning the age of retirement was relatively minor. Skelton retired into Yorkshire where he became curate of Stockton, near York. And on 13th August 1791 he died ‘at his lodgings in York’.¹²⁰

There must have been Ushers during the eighteenth century but information about them is hard to come by. The first Minute of a Trustees’ meeting—that of 1758—may imply that Waterworth acted as his own Usher, or that his (subsequent) executor, also called Thomas Waterworth, had been Usher up to 1758. The Trustees on this occasion (2nd October, 1758) ordered ‘that the Rents and Profits of the Lands appropriated for the Maintenance of the Master and Usher . . . , and also of those appropriated for the Maintenance of the Charity Boys that shall be due this Michaelmas shall be paid to Mr. Thomas Waterworth, Executor of Mr. Waterworth the late Master deceased’. This is probably the Thomas Waterworth already mentioned as having been educated at Brigg and Cambridge. Venn states that he was ordained deacon in 1746, but mentions no earlier living than Bottisham, Cambridgeshire, to which Waterworth was appointed in 1763. He had almost certainly been in Brigg in 1755: the Marriage Register of Wrawby Church (1754-1812) records that he performed a marriage there on 22nd September, 1755.† He may have been acting as Usher and also curate at Wrawby. Licences for schoolmasters were still being issued by the bishops but the Trustees at Brigg do not seem to have worried themselves about the matter till 1786: there are none for Brigg at the Lincolnshire Archives Office before that date.

Two other clergymen who signed the Wrawby marriage register as 'Curate' between 1763 and 1771 may have been also Ushers at the School. They were Tillotson Laycock (who was described as 'of this parish' when he married at Wrawby in 1763, on 25th August), and Stephen Moore (1771). But there is no certainty as to the name of the Usher until 1772. In that year a certificate¹²¹ dated 14th May, by which 'the house of Peter Clapham' in Brigg was stated to be recognised for religious worship for the Presbyterians in Brigg was marked 'Please to direct for T. Watson, Usher of the Grammar School, Brigg'. Nothing is known about him; his name is not even on the list of seven names of Brigg Presbyterians though that of Elizabeth Watson occurs.

In 1772 however another claimant to the Ushership appears—Christopher Cave. Mr. G. S. Dixon states that William Dixon from Riby was entered with Cave (as a boarder) on 9th March, 1772. A few years later Cave was appointed (from Brigg) to Caistor Grammar School where he died in 1802, aged 65. On his death he was taken to be buried at his native place, Normanby-by-Spital, where his family had been yeomen farmers for two hundred years. He was not a graduate.

The first reference in the Minutes to an Usher comes in 1778. On 19th August the Trustees held a meeting 'at the House of Griffith Jones'* and ordered that Mr. John Bennett of Barton (presumably their agent)† should 'apply to Mr. Boarder of Wootton to know whether he will accept of the Usher's Place in Brigg School . . . and teach such Boys Grammar and Phædrus Phables, Reading Writeing and Arithmetick'. (Phædrus's 'Phables' were the fables of Æsop rendered into iambic verse). Whether or not the Rev. John Border took the post immediately is another of our uncertainties, but it was not until 23rd December, 1786, that a licence was granted by the Bishop for him to be Usher.¹²² The Parish Registers at Wrawby show that Border officiated at a wedding in Wrawby Church on 25th November, 1784, when he described himself as 'officiating Minister'. It was not until the late 1790s that he gave his status as that of 'Curate'. It seems fairly certain though that he was Usher at the School from 1778 until he died on 7th April, 1805. He had been 'dying by inches for months ' according to Mrs. Walter,¹²³ and had been unable to teach since 1802. Relations between him and his Headmaster from 1787 (the Rev. James Walter) had not been easy at first. He had, it appears, taken an ' unfounded dislike ' to the Walters, and the latter considered that he ' totally neglected ' their ' young Gentlemen '.¹²⁴ However, things improved, and Mrs. Walter noted in her diary that she had the ' melancholy satisfaction of partaking of the Blessed Sacrament with him a few days before he died '.

USHERS are small beer : they could evidently be dispensed with on occasion. Even Headmasters, necessary though they were since some authorized person must receive the income from the Trust lands, may sink into oblivion or dubiety. But trustees have a legal status, and their names are consequently inscribed on tablets that endure. Whatever other gaps there may be in the story of the School there is no break in the gubernatorial succession. That had been taken care of regularly since the suit in Chancery of 1670. In 1676 an Indenture of Lease and Release (1st and 2nd August) was drawn up by all those concerned in the Chancery suit* — except Eure who was now dead — to ensure continuity in administration. Under this agreement Bettison, Amcotts, and Evelyn were to administer the Trust during their lives and the life of the 'longer liver of them ;' and after their deaths the others, together with twelve more named in the document,† were to be responsible for seeing that the building was finished and for appointing Master and Usher. For this latter work a quorum of four was stipulated, and the decision was to be made by the majority ; but the appointments were 'to be continued only during pleasure'. For examining the pupils and seeing that the buildings were kept in repair any one or more would suffice. The matter of the Fulsby (poor) boys, however, required the presence of at least four Trustees, a majority of whom might reach decisions.

The indenture then proceeded to ensure a constant succession of Trustees : when the Trustees named in the document should be reduced in number to five, then (or earlier if thought fit) the survivors were to nominate and add to themselves as many other fitting persons of good and honourable reputation as should make up their number to fourteen. And so it was to go on for ever, the legal costs being paid out of all the revenues of the Trust, proportionately deducted from salaries of Master and Usher and allowances for poor boys if necessary. One provision was added : the Trustees should have the power to lease any of the property (except the School building and the Master's and Usher's houses) but not for more than twenty-one years ; and they must obtain the best rent possible, due in yearly or half-yearly payments. The Trustees were accorded some protection : each one was to be held accountable only for such rents as came into his hands, and none was to be held liable to make good any loss except through his own wilful default.

*They were Richard Bettison, George Evelyn, Vincent Amcotts, Edward Nelthorpe, Sir Stephen Anderson, Sir Edward Ayscough, and Sir William Hickman.

Five Indentures of Lease and Release nominating new Trustees were drawn up during the period we have so far considered — that is, after 1676, up to 1787. They were in 1694, 1714, 1733, 1757, and 1778. There are thirty-six names, some repeated several times in the list, some which one would expect to find, others which seem a little surprising ; some interesting, others little more than names, having shed now whatever character their bearers possessed when alive.

Besides those who may be termed the Founding Fathers — Nelthorpe and Amcotts, who lived on in their families, and Evelyn (Eure and Bettison were dead before 1694) — there were, of course, Hickman, Anderson, and Ayscough. These were the earliest associates of the original team and the reasons for their choice have been conjectured in an earlier chapter. In 1676 and 1694 new names were added : Pelham, Rossiter, Williamson, Darrell, Booth, Healey, Jenkinson, Emerson, Tomline.

No very good reason strikes one for the inclusion of Henry Jenkinson in the list. His family had come into Lincolnshire from Norfolk at the end of the sixteenth century and settled down at East Wykeham-by-Louth,¹²⁵ which is far enough from Brigg. But the others had all an established position in the area round Brigg. The nearest were John Rossiter of Somerby and Michael Emerson, described in the 1694 document as ' of Barnetby '. The Rossiters had lived in Somerby since the middle of the sixteenth century, but the connection with the Nelthorpes was closer than mere neighbourliness : the father of John Rossiter was that Colonel Rossiter in whose regiment John Nelthorpe had served during the Civil Wars. (John* was the son of Colonel, later Sir Edward Rossiter and Arabella, daughter of John Holles, Earl of Clare¹²⁶). Michael Emerson might almost have been described as an inhabitant of Brigg. Of all the Trustees he probably had the closest actual touch with the School. Maddison¹²⁷ describes his father, Alexander Emerson, a Counsellor-at-Law (he had studied law at Lincoln's Inn which he entered in 1634) as living at Caistor ; but he had close connections with Brigg, with Cadney and Wrawby (both within two or three miles of Brigg). His (i.e. Alexander's) uncle, George Emerson, had been a butcher in Brigg at the end of the sixteenth century ; his father, Robert Emerson, had lived at Cadney ; he himself married as his first wife a cousin descended from Edward Emerson of Brigg (younger brother of George the butcher of Brigg), and as his second wife Frances, daughter and coheir of Robert Kelke of Barneby. Michael Emerson was thus well rooted in Brigg and its immediate environs.

Though Thomas Williamson of Scotter may have been a neighbour of the Hickmans at Gainsborough,* his connection with the School probably came through the Andersons. The family tree given below¹²⁸ shows the relationship.

Trustees of 1676 and 1694 are in italics.

*There seem, however, to have been Williamsons at Gainsborough and Scotter in the fifteenth century. (Maddison, Lincolnshire Pedigrees III, p. 1985.)

The tree also shows how the various Andersons who acted as Trustees at this time were related.

Marmaduke Darrell of Horkstow belonged to a family that had no long connections with Lincolnshire. His great-grandfather, Sir Thomas Darrell, had bought the manor of Horkstow in 1607¹²⁹ but it seems to have been regarded as anything but the principal home of the family. Sir Thomas's eldest son, Edward, sold the manor to his brother Marmaduke in 1620, and he left it in turn to his younger son, also named Marmaduke, the father of the Trustee in 1676. Why Marmaduke Darrell should have been nominated to the office is not clear. Perhaps it was because he came of a family of sound and prudent business men: both his father and grandfather had been charged with 'delinquency' during the Civil War. On 30th April, 1646 it was stated¹³⁰ that they had been in arms against Parliament, not, however, in any command, and had long since recognised their errors and had submitted to Parliament. Their fine was thus reduced to £488.

John Booth of Market Rasen had Lancashire forefathers, one of whom had married the daughter of the 'Lord of Middle Soyle in Killingholme' sometime at the end of the fifteenth or the beginning of the sixteenth century. The descendants of this man remained at Killingholme, Harpswell, or Market Rasen until the end of the seventeenth century.¹³¹

Marmaduke Tomline is spoken of as 'of Manton' in the document of 1676. His father had entered Gray's Inn a year earlier than (Sir) John Nelthorpe, but his connection with Nelthorpe must have been strengthened when he acquired land at Redbourne. Later still he bought Riby from Sir Edward Hussey (1680).¹³² On the grounds of his father's (probable) acquaintance with the founder, territorial propinquity, and what seems to have been a talent for 'getting on,' evident in the father and very likely transmitted to the son, Marmaduke Tomline sounds an admirable choice as Trustee.

Last among these men who watched over the infant fortunes of the School comes Thomas Healey of Messingham. There had been Healeys at Bottesford, Burringham, Frodingham, or Messingham since the early sixteenth century¹³³ and one of them (George Healey of Burringham) had married Ursula Nelthorpe, sister of Richard Nelthorpe of Scawby and aunt of (Sir) John Nelthorpe.

In one way or another then the early Trustees seem almost to have chosen themselves: they were founder's kin, important men in the district, or just neighbours who knew something about land and business matters. Inevitably their names are often found recurring time and again throughout the eighteenth century (and indeed in some instances well into the nineteenth century). The Andersons and the Pelhams, and — after a brief gap — the Nelthorpes, were the backbone round which each group of Trustees was built. Another family which supplied a succession of members from 1694 to 1776 was the Whichcots.

The reasons for the enlisting of the aid of the Andersons have already been discussed. From 1676 until 1758 there were never fewer than two Andersons among the Trustees. In the main they were the Andersons of Manby Hall whose descent from Lord Chief Justice Anderson has already been noted. Unquestionably this family's name would have continued to be met during the next century had the name not been merged with that of the Pelhams. Francis Anderson, described in the 1714 list of Trustees (given in Appendix E) as 'the younger,' married Mary, daughter of Charles Pelham of Brocklesby. Her only brother Charles died leaving no children in 1763 and Charles the grandson of Francis and Mary Anderson became heir to the Pelham estates.¹³⁴ He assumed both the name and the arms of the Pelhams.¹³⁵ It was he who was responsible for the building of the famous mausoleum in Brocklesby Park in memory of his wife, Sophia Aufrère, at a cost of £80,000 (according to a report in the Stamford Mercury, September, 1846), the monument which Lord Torrington condemned in his diary as 'a little Ratcliffe Library' and 'a lumbring Grecian building,' 'a grand folly' of which the expense would be as heavy as the 'clump.' (Its fault in Torrington's eyes was that it was classical and not 'nobly Gothick' in style.) It is true that it was erected under Charles Anderson Pelham's immediate and daily inspection, but it was, of course, designed by James Wyatt and contained Nollekens's marble figure of Pelham's wife. Mr. Antony Dale (Wyatt's biographer, 1956) considers it 'one of the most exquisite small buildings' in these islands, conveying the essence of eighteenth century elegance.

It was the same Charles Anderson Pelham who was condemned by Arthur Young in 1799 for allowing large tracts of good land to be overrun by gorse — an excellent plant, said Young, for a fox hunter, but hardly beneficial to the country.* But it was also he who began the extensive planting of trees on his estates which the well-known Pelham's Pillar commemorates, and who became famed as an excellent landlord of flourishing tenants. When the younger Pitt raised him to the peerage as Baron Yarborough in 1794† he was recognizing not only the work of an enlightened landowner possessed of sound taste but also the worth of a family which had served this part of the country well for nearly two hundred years.

*He added that he hoped if Lord Yarborough had a fall while out hunting it would be into a furze bush.

†Sir Charles H. J. Anderson in his Diary (Lincolnshire Archives) repeats a family story about Charles Anderson Pelham, who was staying at Gauthby when the decision to confer on him a peerage was made. He was overheard saying (as he strode up and down his room talking to himself): 'L-Lord Y-Yarborough, Lord Y-Y-Yarborough; b-by G-G-God, I think it s-s-sounds v-very well.'

In the honour the Pelham family too had deserved to share. They were not, however, one of the really old Lincolnshire families. Sir William Pelham had come to North Lincolnshire from Sussex in the sixteenth century, his first purchase of land being at Newstead between Cadney and Brigg. His son had built the hall at Brocklesby in 1603 which Abraham de la Pryme described over ninety years later as 'a very fine stately building* . . . most excellently furnished, with all manner of rich goods and pictures within, of excellent painting'.¹³⁶ His third son, Henry Pelham, was M.P. for Grimsby in 1620, Grand Chamberlain 1640-1648, Speaker of the House of Commons in July, 1647, and Recorder of Lincoln until he resigned in 1658.¹³⁷ Although this man's nephew Charles was the last of the male line of the family, in their hundred and sixty years' residence at Brocklesby the Pelham family had become important possessors of a vast and 'exceeding pleasant' estate.

Of the other families whose names appeared in the early lists of Trustees neither the Ayscoughs nor the Hickmans are found later: the Ayscoughs were merged with the Boucheretts, one of whom an Ayscough daughter married; and the Hickmans seem to have lost touch with the School after the death of Sir Willoughby in 1720, in spite of marriage connections between them and both the Andersons and the Whichcotes.†

But the Whichcotes of Harpswell endured from 1694 until 1776 when this branch of the family died out in the male line.‡ They were able until 1776 to show an unbroken descent in the male line from the time of Henry VI in the fifteenth century. They had acquired the Harpswell estates by marriage with a Tyrwhitt heiress (a grand-daughter of Sir Robert Tyrwhitt of Kettleby).¹³⁸ The John Whichcot who married this Tyrwhitt heiress was High Sheriff of Lincolnshire in 1466. His Lincolnshire descendants married into important families, among them that of Bussy of Hougham, and that of Carre of Sleaford. During the Civil War and Interregnum period Sir Hamon Whichcot was knighted (1651) at Belvoir Castle, but his son Edward ('of Bishops Norton') was evidently no supporter of Parliament: he was ordered (4th February, 1647) to settle £50 a year on the Minister of Harpswell — 'and so his fine of £1,013 10s. is reduced to £513 10s.'. ¹³⁹ It was the grandson of Sir Hamon who was the Colonel George Whichcot whose son John we have already noted as being a boarder at the School 1720-1723. Thomas Waterworth

*This was not the home of the first Lord Yarborough. His house had been rebuilt about 1730. M. W. Barley, Lincolnshire and the Fens, p. 89).

†It is true though that these were the Whichcotes of Aswarby who became identified with Harpswell only after 1776. (See the following note).

‡The estates at Harpswell then passed through marriage to the junior branch of the family—newcomers to the county in 1723—at Aswarby. (Maddison, Lincolnshire Pedigrees, III, p. 1073).

must have welcomed as pupil a representative of so solid and accepted a county family.

But many of the names on the 1676 Indenture do not reappear. The explanation seems to be that either the families died out or they moved or sank in importance. John Rossiter left only a daughter. William Tomline died in 1743, leaving a son aged only three in 1733 when more Trustees were chosen. This son died unmarried in 1803.* John Booth's son sold the Killingholme estate, and the family were scattered. Marmaduke Darrell sold Horkstow in 1685 to Edward Darrell, 'citizen and stationer of London' (Whitechapel). The Emersons seem to have migrated into Nottinghamshire.

Of the names which take the places of these families in the eighteenth century the most outstanding is that of Nelthorpe. From 1714 (the third renewal of Trustees) there was always a Nelthorpe connected with the School until 1865 when the last baronet died. In 1733 there were no fewer than five Nelthorpes included. One, James Nelthorpe, sent his sons to the School; another, Richard, was the owner of Scawby; the third was the fourth baronet, Sir Henry, who lived at Barton-on-Humber; John Nelthorpe of Little Grimsby represented a junior branch of the family descended from Edward Nelthorpe of Beverley (uncle of the founder); the last was Dr. Edward Nelthorpe of Lincoln,† a younger brother of Richard Nelthorpe of Scawby.¹⁴⁰ The later Nelthorpes were the Barton and Scawby branches which became one when Edward Nelthorpe of Scawby died in 1788 leaving Scawby to Sir John, the sixth baronet, and besides them John Nelthorpe of Little Grimsby, the eldest son of Waterworth's pupil, Griffith Nelthorpe, and Sheriff for Lincolnshire in 1775.¹⁴¹ The Richard Nelthorpe referred to had followed his grandfather as owner of Scawby at the age of eighteen.‡

*He bequeathed the Riby estate to George Pretymann, Bishop of Lincoln, who assumed the name of Tomline. (Maddison. Lincolnshire Pedigrees, III, p. 997).

†He lived in the Palace at Lincoln, where later Squire Osbaldeston lived (completely unaware that he was living in a palace). In those days the Bishops lived at Buckden. (M. Gaze, M.S. History of the Nelthorpe Family).

‡When he died (intestate) in 1757 the inventory of his personal estate showed £161 10s. 6½d. in his purse, plate £159 18s. 3d., furniture in Best Chamber £33 13s. 0d., in Blue Chamber £16 1s. 0d., in Yellow Chamber £26 16s. 6d., dressing room £3 11s. 6d., Mistress Nelthorpe's maid's room £5 17s. 6d., Mr. Nelthorpe's chamber £17 2s. 6d., Miss Nelthorpe's chamber £11 5s. 0d., her maid's room £2 5s. 0d., chamber at staircase head £10 12s. 0d., Great Dining Room £20 13s. 0d., Common Parlour £10 6s. 0d., Little Hall £9 11s. 6d., Withdrawing Room £47 19s. 0d., Laundry £2 6s. 11d., Kitchen and Servants' Hall £5 16s. 0d., Still Room £1 13s. 6d., Brew-house, Dairy and Granary £4 12s. 0d., Long Gallery £6 5s. 10d., Lumber Garret £6 13s. 6d., Men Servants' Garrets £7 5s. 6d., Feather Garret £1 5s. 0d., Maids' Chamber and Closet £10 10s. 6d., Mr. John Fowler's £4 2s. 6d., Cellars £9 11s. 6d., Armour valued at £11 19s. 6d., 4 coach mares £36, 3 saddle and 3 draught-horses £21, pair of oxen £17, 136 sheep £62 8s. 0d., 50 lambs £12 10s. 0d. and 4 cows £17. Total personalty, with outstanding debts £1,847 18s. 0d. (M. Gaze, op. cit.).

His son Edward, the last of the Scawby branch, was something of a character. According to a local tradition 'Neddy Nelthorpe' when visiting any of his cottagers would remark before he departed that he had no money to give 'but here is something to keep the fire going'. With that he would produce from his pocket a handful of coals which he threw on the fire.¹⁴² Mr. Gaze quotes the Hesleden manuscript history of the family as saying of him that he had '“imbibed some prejudice against the female part of society, and at the age of sixty-seven he died a bachelor . . . while on his customary Christmas visit to . . . Sir John Nelthorpe at Barton”'. He had evidently had a strong sense of family: when he bought land at Bradley (from Sir Cecil Wray) he appointed John Nelthorpe of Little Grimsby his deputy in 1769.¹⁴³

Neither of the two Barton baronets—Sir Henry and Sir John Nelthorpe, who held office during this period—was negligible. They were squires content to live in the rural remoteness of North Lincolnshire and playing their part in local government, but they were constantly increasing the extent of their landed property, they held valuable property in London (Charterhouse Square, St. James', Aldgate, Eastcheap) where also they each had a town house, and they, like Charles Anderson Pelham, had some pretensions to culture.

It was very largely the two wives Sir Henry Nelthorpe married who were responsible for the sweetness and light in the Nelthorpe household. The first one, Joan Seaman, provided many of the books in her husband's house: she brought them with her, and Mr. Gaze records a payment of 14s. for transporting them from Norwich to a wherry which carried them to Barton. They were valued by J. Worrall of Norwich at £90-£100.* When she died Sir Henry married his second cousin Elizabeth Branston in 1740. (A portrait of Sir Henry and Lady Nelthorpe in their wedding clothes hangs in Scawby Hall.) She it was who may be considered as the origin of the large and interesting collection of pictures now at Scawby. In particular she was a patron of George Stubbs,† especially when he was somewhat odoriferously engaged on his 'History of the Horse' in the farmhouse at Horkstow nearby. Stubbs painted the dogs of Sir John and also the well known 'Sir John Nelthorpe shooting over Barton Fields,' painted in 1776. She must have instilled in her son some knowledge and love of pictures as he not only continued her patronage of Stubbs but commissioned Thomas Lawrence (later Sir Thomas Lawrence, P.R.A.) to paint portraits of himself, his wife, and his niece Charlotte Carter who later married Lord William Beauclerk. The portrait of Lady Nelthorpe is said to have been painted when Lawrence was only twenty years old. In that case Sir John must have had an eye for painting and also for a rising painter. Whether his taste in music was as good perhaps only his wife and household could tell. But in 1785 he bought a flute and case (for four and a half guineas) ; and a watercolour shows him playing what appears to be the bassoon.

Not only his taste in art but his general education had been his mother's responsibility as he was a mere baby when his father died. He was ten years old when his mother sent him to London. She required him to keep a Journal in which she might read of his doings and opinions. In it he recorded his London sightseeing—the Royal Exchange, the Bank, South Sea House, Vauxhall, Ranelagh, Saddler's Wells, Westminster Abbey, St. Paul's Cathedral, and the melancholy Bethlehem Hospital. He attended a Drawing Room at Kensington Palace, where he regretted his suit had no sword, and where he would willingly have tripped up the heels of a page who looked saucily at him. After London he went on to Essex where he found the local pronunciation difficult. His friends, however, told him that his own pronunciation was better than when he had first appeared in London.

He was at Eton from 1757 to 1763, and from there he went to Trinity College, Oxford. He was only twenty-three when he was made High Sheriff (1767), and only twenty-six when he became a Deputy Lieutenant for Lincolnshire. During his minority his wealth had been steadily accumulating and he was now able to buy property in London and in the provinces. He also received the Scawby property in 1788 from Edward Nelthorpe. His importance was growing, and when the invasion scare at the time of the Revolutionary Wars occurred (the naval mutinies at the Nore and Spithead in 1797 having thoroughly frightened the government and caused a cry for volunteers to defend the country), Sir John raised (1798) the 'Brigg Independant Volunteer Armed Association,' over eighty strong, with himself as commandant.* But he died the following year. His daughter Frances wrote from London on the 7th May, 1799, to John Wilbar (Sir John's agent) that Sir John had caught cold. He died at his house in Berkeley Square† when still only in middle life and with presumably many years of useful service ahead.

Some of the other names occurring on the lists of Trustees during the eighteenth century have only a fleeting connection with Brigg. It is difficult to see what Lord Middleton is doing in this galley. Other names at least had a clear Lincolnshire connection

*He had left Barton for Scawby. He sold the Barton property in 1792.

†His father's town house had been in Red Lion Square. Sir John's was in Sackville Street 1777-1794; then in 1794 he moved to Berkeley Square.

— Pindar, Harrison, Appleyard, Monson, Lister. One or two names had a link with the School which lasted through two generations : for example the Thorolds.*

And another name appeared in 1778 which was to continue for another century — Elwes — an obvious choice because of the close touch that family had with Brigg. But the Lawrence Monck of 1757 and 1778 cannot have known a great deal about local conditions.† He was a London merchant who married Jane Tournay, one of an ancient Lincolnshire family. She brought her husband the old Tournay manor of Caenby, in 1744.¹⁴⁴

In the main however the other names had at least the justification that their bearers were connected with existing Trustees. The Thorolds, Saundersons,‡ and Wrays were linked by marriage. There were links between the Andersons and the Vyners and Carters ; the latter inter-married with the Nelthorpes, with whom were connected the Parkins and the Cracrofts ; and the Cracrofts in turn had marriage connections with the Amcotts and the Westons.§ In a sense the system of government for the School, or at any rate the foundation, reflected that dominating the country for much of the eighteenth century — government by connexion. Even when they were not actually related to one another the Trustees were in frequent touch, either in Lincoln or on visits to each other ; and many a worse method of government might have been devised.

Some of them, as shown above, were national as well as local figures. Edward Weston of Somerby (to whom the monument at Somerby was erected) was Chief Secretary for Ireland. Sir Cecil Wray (the one who appears on the 1778 list : he was first cousin twice removed of the Cecil Wray who figures in 1733) came near to defeating the redoubtable Charles James Fox in the notorious Westminster election of 1784, in spite of the support given Fox by the beautiful Duchess of Devonshire who lavished her attractions on the voters, and by the Prince of Wales. In Lincolnshire his fame came rather from the magnificent house (‘ Summercastle ’) which he built near Scampton in 1760. On his estate there he made (like Harrison of Norton Place) a number of agricultural experiments and improvements, and planted trees extensively.

*The Thorolds are mentioned by Maddison (op. cit. I, p. xi) as one of the six Lincolnshire families which (in 1902) could show an unbroken descent in the male line from possessors of estates in Henry VII's time.

†But he was, at first at any rate, willing to learn: he attended three out of the four meetings of Trustees recorded from 1758 to 1787. But though he lived till 1798 he never turned up for another.

‡Sir Thomas Saunderson and Robert Vyner were M.P.s for Lincolnshire — Vyner six times between 1722 and 1754. (Lincoln Record Society: Banks Family Papers, ed. by J. W. F. Hill). His son was M.P. for the county 1794-1802.

One other Trustee during these years deserves separate mention : the Rev. Robert Carter Thelwall.* He was no national personage, nor any agricultural pioneer, but he must have been a character, both amusing and, at times, infuriating those about him. As the owner of Redbourne Hall he was interested in the scheme to improve the drainage of the Ancholme river after 1767 when an act of Parliament was passed. He maintained that his father William Carter when he first came into Lincolnshire at the beginning of the century had adequately drained the low grounds in Redbourne at a cost to himself of about £1,500. But that had been ignored, and regardless of the fact that 'Redbourne Carrs, take them together, are the worst and poorest in the whole level,' 'so intrinsically barren . . . as scarce to produce half a load of the worst hay in England,' 'a law obtained and made by a few people of great rank, power, interest and property, without any consideration'¹⁴⁵ had been made subjecting Redbourne to a heavy drainage tax. Poor Redbourne had 'not the least interest with the commissioners to obtain . . . justice'. Carter Thelwall seems to have made the baiting of the Ancholme Commissioners almost his life work.

When his wife died in 1780 he put up a memorial to her in Redbourne Church :

'Here lyeth the body of Charlotte, daughter of Sir Henry Nelthorpe, Bart. and next her (as he hopes) will be deposited that of the Rev.^d Robt. Carter Thelwall who desires to to record on her tomb this farther memorial of himself (as his highest character, glory, and happiness) that from the 1st of Jan. MDCCLXVII, he was the loving and beloved husband of the above mention'd Charlotte, a woman (according to his judgment) of most gentle manners, mild affections, elegant accomplishments, refin'd humours, and sound judgment join'd to great piety, benevolence and charity.'

Some time after his wife died he wrote a confidential letter to his brother-in-law,¹⁴⁶ Sir John Nelthorpe, begging him to look after his daughter Charlotte, then aged thirteen, till she reached the age of twenty-one, should he (the father) die or lose his reason. If he should go mad he asked that he might be kept either in his own or in some 'decent farmer's house' with a handsome allowance. If he should die he asked merely that he should be conveyed in his own carriage with the 'back Pannel taken out and filled up to put the Coffin in behind ; and that part of the Case which will project behind to be cover'd with an Oil cloth to conceal it and give it the Appearance of a Trunk,' or in any old but strong carriage. Thus he might be carried 'with the greatest Expedition and Privacy to the Haven where I wish to be'. He then proceeded to marry again.

The Walters

WHEN Skelton resigned in 1787 the Trustees appointed as Master in his place the Rev. James Walter.* He came to Brigg from Louth ; his place of origin was Kent ; nevertheless he was to remain in North Lincolnshire until his death in 1845 ; and nearly forty-seven years of his long life were spent at Brigg Grammar School. He is the bridge between the eighteenth and the nineteenth centuries. The kind of school over which he presided and the kind of life he lived must have been typical of the institutions and ways of the eighteenth century, and, in spite of the first chill breath of reform in the 1830s, Walter's successor, Cotterill, seems to have carried on these ways into the last quarter of the nineteenth century, following as he himself once said Walter's ' good example.'

James Walter was born in 1759 at Shipbourne in Kent, the son of William Hampson Walter. He went to Tonbridge School, from which some years earlier his elder brother Weaver had won a Smythe Exhibition, proceeding with it to Christ's College, Cambridge.¹⁴⁷

It is of some interest to note that a previous holder of one of the Smythe Exhibitions (and subsequently Second Master at Tonbridge) was George Austen, described as ' father of Jane Austen the Novelist'.¹⁴⁸ The link between the Austen and Walter families was however closer than this. Early in the eighteenth century Rebecca Hampson had married William Walter, M.D., and on his death she married again, this time William Austen, surgeon.¹⁴⁹ By her first husband she had William Hampson Walter, the father of the Rev. James ; and she bore to her second husband the George Austen just referred to. James Walter and Jane Austen were thus half-cousins. It is evident that there was contact between the Walter and Austen families. E. Austen-Leigh¹⁵⁰ quotes a letter from George Austen to Mrs. William Hampson Walter describing the birth of his daughter Jane the previous night, ' without a great deal of warning ' but ' soon happily over '. Little indeed would be known of Jane Austen's early years (or her parents' early married life) but for the correspondence carried on by the George Austens and William Hampson Walters.¹⁵¹ And a letter written by James Walter's sister Philadelphia gives the earliest description of Jane Austen (then aged twelve).¹⁵² J. C. Walter, the grandson of the Rev. James, claimed¹⁵³ that his father when young used to visit the Austen family. As his father was not born until the end of 1800 the contact between the two families must have been long sustained. Some evidence of a later connection with the Austens may be provided by the fact that James Walter's son Weever Walter named the daughter born to his wife in 1835 Jane Austen.¹⁵⁴ And Jane Austen wrote of another son of Walter — Henry Walter — that 'he was reported the best Classic in the University'.¹⁵⁵

As little would probably be known about James Walter as about his predecessors in the Mastership at Brigg but for the fact that his wife (and cousin), Frances Maria Walter had a sudden urge in 1809, she being then forty-six and married for twenty-five years, to put on record as much as she knew about her own family. The impulse did not last long but while the mood was on her she managed to pack a good deal of useful information into about 12,000 words.* She explained the impulse to write :

Sunday, October 15th, 1809. Yesterday as I sat at my work, musing on times past, I could not help regretting that I knew so very little of my Ancestors. I attribute this deficiency to the loss of my Parents when I was too young to attend to their conversation on the past, and as I really feel too late the earnest desire to know something about my Progenitors, I am determined to indulge my own Children by writing down all I recalled having heard concerning them, and what I know concerning myself. This is not from vanity, for I have no glorious Ancestry to boast, but from a desire that when according to the course of nature the hand that writes this may be crumbled into Dust, my memory may be more firmly implanted on the minds of my children, than those of my Ancestors have been on mine.

She had been born in Leadenhall Street ; her father, a haberdasher and glover, died when she was only six ('he was siezed with the gout which fixed in his head and his sufferings were most acute I recollect cataplasms being laid at his feet to draw the complaint to a less dangerous part but it pleased the Almighty that it should stop in the vital part, which was immediately fatal'). Her mother had died of small-pox† five years before and Frances Maria was then brought up by an elder half-brother in London and an aunt at Addington Lodge. Shortly after her father's death in 1769 she first saw, during an acute attack of whooping-cough, 'the boy who was destined to be my beloved husband [when he] came on a visit to my brother with his amiable sister Sarah. I was ill in bed when he quitted the house, but requested he might be admitted to my room to take leave of me.' James was about eleven and Frances Maria six or seven. She saw little more of James for the next few years but 'he sent me a goldfinch, and a long string of birds' eggs, with a turkey's egg at one end, which he desired me frequently to look at, as his face was freckled like it'.

Then 'in January, 1776 James Walter and his only surviving sister Philadelphia came to London and spent a few days with me at my brother's, and then went with me down to Chalk Farm [her aunt's new house near Bromley], when, a tremendous fall of snow coming on, they were weather bound for above a fortnight. I was not then thirteen, and he being four years older appeared quite a man to me, but he was always kind to me, though I was too much of a child to claim his notice when females approaching nearer to his own age were in company — yet in our rambles in the snow, he never neglected his cousin Fanny and when I had written my name on the glittering covering of the earth, he added to it, "is the girl that I love". Young as I was this made a strong impression on my mind.'

After she had left Mrs. Munn's school at Bromley at the age of fourteen she spent her time with her aunt and uncle, first at Chalk Farm and then at Oxted Court. Her occupations she says were working and reading: her uncle had 'a small but pretty collection' of books such as the Spectator, Tatler, Guardian, Shakespeare's Works, Addison, Thompson and Rowe, 'and luckily for me no Circulating Library was within my reach'. Books were her main pleasure, but the country about Oxted was 'rather pretty' and she used to walk a great deal. 'I passed many pleasant hours at Mr. Featherstone's who lived at a pretty cottage in sight of our house. Captain and Mrs. Falkner with their beautiful daughter, the young lady of the Manor, were very desirous of having me a good deal with them. He was a very sensible and pleasant companion, but she was the vilest woman I ever knew, and after the Captain's death I never paid her a visit without being more and more disgusted.' She was able to visit her relations, among them in 1780 her Walter cousins, at this time at Ightham. There she renewed her acquaintance with James Walter 'who was then a student at Cambridge and was very kind and attentive to me'. He had left Tonbridge at the age of eighteen, entering Corpus Christi College as a sizar. By the time he met Frances Maria in 1780 he had become a scholar of the college.

Now the attraction which each had always had for the other began to show itself more markedly :

The latter end of Autumn I visited my friend Philadelphia [James's sister], whose parents had changed their abode and lived at Borough Green. Here I passed a few days with her brother James previous to his going to Cambridge and he paid me the most delicate and gratifying attentions. He slyly contrived to snip off a lock of my hair, but I thought it was merely from mischief as I supposed my plain face could have no chance of captivating him especially when Miss Lewin was flinging out all her snares to allure him. When he went to Cambridge, he fell into company with a man of vile character whose name was Lade, a Counsellor. I knew him because he lived in Miss Hoskin's family mansion. He kept hounds in the neighbourhood of Cambridge, and seeing James out with them gave him a pressing invitation to his house. When he wrote to Philly he mentioned his new acquaintance with great pleasure, but his mother was so shocked when I informed her that he kept a Mistress and that he was a very impious fellow, that she requested I would add a line or two to Philly's letter and inform him what bad hands he was likely to get into. Little did I then think of the consequences of these few lines. He quickly answered them, expressed his gratitude for my information, and assured me that he was engaged to dine with the Counsellor the very day he had received my epistle, yet he turned his horse's head another way and had never seen him afterwards ;* he requested me to allow him to send me the heads of the Lectures on History which he was attending as a means of improvement to him and myself, and he should expect I would send my comments on them in return. My eagerness after information inclined me to consent and we carried on our correspondence on this plan for some time. When we next met, (1782) he had a ring on his finger with hair in it. I looked earnestly at it. To my surprise it was not red like Miss Lewin's. He observed me and told me it was cut from my head. These circumstances were rather symptomatic of love, but he never talked of it to me.

Mrs. Walter's tone suggests a somewhat unconvincing attempt at naïveté, but she was too sensible, level-headed, and shrewd to be accused of that. It must be remembered that she was writing for her children to read and would not wish to seem too forward or scheming. It was not long in any event before James's intentions became quite unmistakable. He and she met again in London and 'entered one Sunday evening into a long melancholy conversation on the misery of College life, and the dismal prospect before his eyes as he had not the wherewithal to support a wife'. Frances's 'sister'* was present at this conversation and said afterwards that she could see James was very much in love, and 'that she had a strong suspicion it was with me: I then began to think the same thing'. Accordingly she decided to give a lead and in her next letter 'hinted that I feared his despondency originated in some fervant attachment'. James responded: on the 9th June 1782 he wrote her a letter 'declaring his real sentiments, which was received by me with inexpressible satisfaction'. 'Never,' she adds, 'have I had reason to regret our mutual affection from that time till now.' She answered his letter without coquettishness, 'acknowledging my regard though I much feared neither his fortune nor mine would allow us to marry for some time'. After a few weeks she went to stay with James's parents: 'those were days of happiness indeed.' But she admitted they were followed by 'many miserable hours'. James Walter was anxious to be ordained but was 'several times cruelly disappointed. Such was the will of Heaven, who had blessings in store for us far greater than those we were so anxious to obtain.'

*The 'Counsellor' must have been the notorious Sir John Lade, the 'Jehu' of Lewis Melville's Beaux of the Regency. Mrs. Walter was perhaps a little harsh in her judgment of him: he was foolish rather than knavish. But he was drawn irresistibly to low life and eventually was imprisoned for debt. His association with the Prince Regent on top of his other activities suggests that James Walter did well to heed his cousin's warning.

James's lack of prospects was not their only difficulty: opposition came from Frances's uncle, Thomas Brasier of Oxted Court. When her father had died her two aunts (one of them Brasier's wife) had been appointed her guardians, but Brasier had been named as trustee for the £1,000 left her by her father. This 'little pittance' was to be paid when she came of age or married. And Brasier was not anxious that she should marry.

In the Autumn of 1782, James wrote to my uncle to inform him of our mutual regard. I confess my blood rises when I think of the degrading figure I cut upon the occasion. Never will the scene be blotted from my memory. I was gathering filberts, when my uncle desired I would bring him some. I obeyed his orders, he seated himself on a garden bench, and cracked them all very coolly while I stood before him, as a criminal before a Judge, to hear him ridicule the object of my affections and his family. I was told my fortune was necessary to keep them from starving and that it would all be gone in a very short time, that Mr. Lyell to whom Mr. Walter's (i.e. James Walter's) father was Steward was so incensed on account of some Hay having taken fire that he meant to dismiss him and that my little pittance would keep them all. Good Heavens ! what a base reflexion, and this too from a man who was conscious that little as my fortune was, it was daily diminishing under his management. He however at length condescended to dismiss me from his presence with a strict injunction to have nothing more to say to my beloved James. He certainly went quite the wrong way to work, for my indignation at the calumnies he had asserted increased if possible my affection for the object of them.

Not only her uncle but also her half-brother John opposed the marriage, and as she was not only fond of him but felt that his sixteen years' seniority to herself gave him some claim to speak with authority she was distressed.

When my dear brother came to talk to me, I had a hard task indeed. He was all tenderness : he spoke in the highest terms imaginable of James, but earnestly requested me to give him up on account of the smallness of our means — or at least to wait till he had a Living. This kindness deprived me of the power of speech. Bathed in tears I could not articulate a word but silently heard . . . At the conclusion he kissed me and desired I would go up to London the following week and endeavour to recover my spirits. Agreeable to his invitation I went, but not with the least intention of deserting my lover. James walked up to meet me there and my brother was displeased, but from that time gave up opposing my wishes. Not so my uncle. I was consequently deprived of the pleasure of seeing him for some time after this.

Soon however the situation changed : James Walter was recommended by the Master of Corpus Christi College to the Rev. John Emeris, master of Louth Grammar School since 1766 (and formerly under-master at Lincoln)¹⁵⁶ as an assistant in his school.* The prospect of employment brought the possibility of marriage much nearer and Frances was delighted, though she 'shuddered at the idea of his going into what I imagined must be a very fenny County, and therefore an unhealthy one'. Unhealthy or not, it was a long way from Kent and she determined, in spite of all opposition, to see him before he went.

I told my sister . . . that I abhorred clandestine meetings, but that I was not ashamed to meet him in open daylight. By letter we agreed that he should be in a plantation of Mr. Featherstone's called the Horse-shoe Walk by eleven o'clock on the 9th of January, where I promised to join him. Unfortunately it was a very busy day with us at Oxted. I had got across the inclosure called the Marsh and saw my dear friend's buttons glitter in the sun, when I was met by my uncle. "Where are you going?" says he. "To meet James," was my immediate reply, for I scorned to deceive him. "Let me first have some conversation with you. I find you are resolved to marry him, but I hope not yet as I could not pay you your fortune till you are of Age." "Indeed, sir, we have no thought of such a thing," replied I. "On that condition I shall say nothing farther against his coming to see you and so you may tell him; but I wish to speak to him." This was the most delightful news to me and I ran with my utmost speed to inform my dear James that he might now visit me without concealment. It was a day of joy to me indeed; twice more he came before his departure to Lincolnshire.

Matters continued to go well. Walter was ordained deacon by the Bishop of Lincoln on the 16th March and then began his duties as 'Curate and Usher' to Emeris at Louth. Frances was herself much more settled and contented: 'my warm attachment had effected a complete revolution in my ideas; I now felt not the least relish for dress and gaiety, and was resolved to curtail all my useless expenses: even a Ball or a Play could hardly tempt me. My mind was so engrossed by one object that I felt almost disgusted with everything else.' Next came the news (in 1783) that Walter had been elected a Fellow of Corpus Christi College.* And he and Frances were able to spend their time together at his parents' house from the 23rd June to the 15th July in the same year, three of the happiest weeks of her life.

The following eight months were a period of waiting for her. She stayed until the autumn at Oxted, months 'spent as pleasantly as my James's absence and my poor aunt's and Thomas's (Brasier) tempers would allow of. Miss Featherstone, Miss Hoskins, and Miss Legg were my frequent companions. From the former I received much instruction and never regretted the hours spent in her society; the second I visited with very different feelings, but I pitied her: she was rich, she was beautiful, and she was silly; Miss Legg was a good sort of girl, pretty and industrious, and my intimacy with her made an agreeable variety: with her I was on the most familiar footing'. Then came a period of sick-nursing. She went at her half-brother's request to look after his wife who 'had a dreadful complaint in her eyes,' threatening to destroy her sight. In the middle of this trouble Frances's 'dear niece,' Maria, went down with the small-pox very badly, so that 'the marks of it she will carry to her grave'. On top of these anxieties John Walter himself succumbed to an attack of erysipelas ('St. Anthony's Fire'). This 'constant scene of misery' must have depressed her; but, though she was not to know it at the time, it was a useful initiation into the difficulties she was to experience in her married life.

*This was regarded as an important step. The Rev. James Giffard, curate at Wrawby from some time after his relinquishment of a chaplaincy in the Navy (at the time of the peace of Amiens 1802) until 1814 wrote in his (unpublished) 'Memoirs' addressed to his infant son in 1815: 'If you become a member of a University exert yourself to obtain a fellowship; and may God Almighty grant you success: you will be secured from the wretchedness of the endless train of mortifications and disappointments which your poor father brought upon himself and endured for so many years of his life.' He himself had failed to secure a fellowship at Cambridge owing, he said, to his difficulty with mathematics.

Then ensued preparations for marriage which was expected to take place in the early summer of 1784 :

On the fifth of April 1784 . . . my uncle gave me a letter from James to read, desiring that he would immediately proceed in having the Marriage Settlement drawn up, and expressing a determination not to meddle with my property, choosing it should be settled on me. This my Uncle condescended to say was very liberal indeed, and I was much gratified to find even he had discovered that I had fixed my affections on a man who was incapable of any mercenary proceedings . . . I had promised my Uncle . . . as soon as I was of Age to settle all my pecuniary concerns with him, and so informed my dear James, who immediately consulted with his excellent friend Mr. Emeris on the very delicate situation I, an inexperienced female, was placed in, in having to settle matters with my Guardian without anyone to advise with me. The result of this consultation was that Mr. Emeris decided that he [presumably James Walter] would set off immediately to be present at this unpleasant business, and on the 20th of April, to my very great but truly agreeable astonishment, I received a letter announcing his intended appearance the next day. He came, and all my troubles were forgotten; we went together to Seale, and the day after I came of age James went to Oxted in my place. His presence caused great surprise, but no settling could take place without me; therefore the Monday following it was determined we should have a meeting at Westerham between Mr. Brasier, James Walter, myself, and Mr. Lamb who had been employed as my Attorney by Mr. Brasier. A tremendous day for me, though I had some comfort in finding my brother of the party. James took Mr. Swayne with him as his Attorney. Here then was poor I with five gentlemen, all disputing about my little property, which to my sorrow I found was considerably diminished, for part of it had been left to Mr. Hawes, part of it to my uncle John Brasier. This Mr. Brasier had no right to do, and ought to have made good, but what was gone could not be recalled entirely as it was very clear his finances were much deranged: this was a discovery my dear brother had never before made, and a very great shock to him ; he was so connected with my late Trustee that he could not urge much against him, but he privately acknowledged to me that I had been very ill used. Mr. Brasier declared if we did not come to his terms he would fling the little that remained into Chancery After some hours' altercation matters were settled, I scarce knew how, but I know I was heartily glad when the meeting was concluded.

Within ten days or so of this unpleasantness, however, the two Walters were married. James's brother, Weaver Walter, performed the ceremony, and after dinner the bride and bridegroom went up to London. They left without Frances's ' fortune '. Her uncle promised to follow them and pay the next day but when he arrived he could produce only a little and ' I trembled for my poor husband lest he had given up his Fellowship to marry poor me with this petty portion '. There was little that could be done however, and on 5th May, 1784 the Walters left London in the Stilton Diligence, stayed the night in Stilton, and from there made the journey to Boston and thence to Louth in post-chaises. The ' worthy Mr. Emeris . . . kindly opened his hospitable doors to receive the Bride and Bridegroom '.

The three years they spent in Louth were busy, happy years. Eighteenth century Louth did not lack attractions and diversions, and although the Walters let it be known they were no card-players, ' which effectually prevented our being troubled with such society as could not enjoy conversation only,' they never knew what it was ' for time to hang heavy on our hands '. Life was pleasant but simple : ' we were strictly economical . . . we did not even drink tea for breakfast or in the afternoon. Water was Mr. Walter's drink at those hours ; I was more extravagant for I had new milk whey. Our household was so small that we could scarce cook little enough to serve us.' That problem was to some extent solved when they took their first boarder in August, ' for the trifling sum of eighteen pounds a year '. But as Mrs. Walter points out ' everything was then cheap : the first butter I bought cost me fourpence a pound and meat 3d. or 4d.'

When James Walter went to Buckden in September 1784 to be ordained priest his wife had to fend for herself and she found the experience ' quite dreadful ' ; but her friends rallied round and amused and occupied her. She had, she admitted, plenty to do in preparing for the arrival of their first child. When the time came, however, she was taken by surprise, her eldest son Henry arriving a month before he was expected on 28th January, 1785. She was not even provided with a nurse and had to borrow one of Mrs. Emeris's servants for a month. When her own nurse did arrive Mrs. Walter was too inexperienced to know how to deal with her. The consequence was that the nurse did much as she liked, 'which I believe laid the foundation of much ill-health in my little darling, who everyone supposed must die'. But in February her sister-in-law, Philadelphia, came to stay and remained for nine weeks, helping greatly in caring for the child. By the time June arrived the boy was well enough for the family to pay a visit to Kent. 'Mr. Walter undertook the serious task of driving me into Kent. Everyone said it would certainly be the death of our boy. I weaned him on the road, and he was very unwell, but we got through our journey on the whole much better than could have been expected.' On their return, perhaps not surprisingly, young Henry Walter continued 'very delicate and often ill' and his mother could rarely leave him. In October 1786 a second child arrived, 'a much finer child than my first and promised fair for life But alas ! the day before he was eight weeks old he expired having had eight fits in less than 24 hours. My dear Henry was ill at the time and getting up in the night to him had given me so violent a cold that I fear it was injurious to my little angel.'

All these domestic problems and anxieties had made it necessary for the Walters to engage a second female servant, and that in its turn raised the question of money. To some extent the difficulty was solved by an increase in the number of boarders in their house ; and in addition Walter undertook the curacy at North Reston, 'which added a few pounds . . . to our income'. But boarders were not an unmixed blessing. Their third boarder (he came in August 1785), one Purkiss, was 'a remarkably clever boy, but equally remarkable for eccentricity,' and the Walters were relieved when Mr. Purkiss removed his son the following year. Another boarder taken in September 1785 'in an evil hour' as a private pupil was John Theodosius Langhorne. He was difficult because at the regular parties arranged between the Walters and two other couples — parties 'when we agreed to have nothing for supper but roast potatoes and hotched cockles' — he was 'a sad intruder'. Moreover he was often 'engaged with his cousin . . . and seldom returned home sober'. He too left them after a year. But their house in Westgate was full and they were prospering.

It was after another visit to Kent in June 1787 that they heard 'that Brigg School was vacant'. 'Mr. Wigelsworth informed us . . . and he thought if Mr. Walter applied for it, he had sufficient interest to get him the Situation.' Wigelsworth was as good as his word and Walter was elected Head Master on 30th July, 1787. It sounds a piece of eighteenth century jobbery, but the post had been properly advertised 'in two London Evening Papers and the Lincoln and Cambridge Papers,'¹⁵⁷ and there is no reason to believe there was anything discreditable in the appointment of James Walter.* His success at Louth, shown by the growth of the number of pupils entrusted to him in his house and the evidence of his high standing in Louth, indicates that the Trustees were appointing a man in whose professional abilities they could have confidence.

It was true, of course, that Walter had no training for the task he was undertaking other than his experience at Louth. But that sort of experience was the only, the recognised, method of approach to the job. Apart from Louth the only experience he could draw upon was that of his own school-days at Tonbridge, and that cannot have been very helpful to him. He had been under the headmastership of the Rev. Vicesimus Knox (1772-8), who after a period as assistant at the Merchant Taylors' School and curate at St. Dunstan's-in-the-East was, it is suggested by D. C. Somervell,¹⁵⁸ too exhausted to make much of a success of his new post, so that numbers in the school had declined catastrophically.

Walter may have had doubts and qualms at the thought of the new responsibility he was taking on, but his wife was frankly dismayed: 'I confess I did not like the idea; I had met with such uncommon friendship from the inhabitants of Louth that I really wished my husband might not succeed.' She was the more disturbed because this new appointment meant a double upset: they were about to transfer themselves to a new house which had been built for them in Louth; they had had to leave their house in Westgate, and having lived in a borrowed house since the 27th April, now were obliged to get out of that; on top of this move would come another in a few weeks' time—to Brigg. Mrs. Walter, now expecting her third child,† was not best able to cope with these difficulties. Nor can the future have been much brightened for her by the thought of living in a small North Lincolnshire market town after the attractions of Louth, even though (according to the Universal British Directory, 1792, p. 149)¹⁵⁹ Brigg boasted 'a neat theatre, dancing and card assemblies &c. which render the town a scene of gaiety as well as of business'.‡

When Walter opened the school for the new term at Brigg on the 8th August, 1787 he must have been depressed. He wrote to Sir John Nelthorpe, chairman of the Trustees¹⁶⁰ that only two boys turned up. The house was in a state of confusion. At their meeting on the 30th July 1787 the Trustees had ordered 'such

*The news of the vacancy had been made public a fortnight earlier when (15th June, 1787) the Lincoln, Rutland and Stamford Mercury announced the resignation of Skelton.

†It arrived two days after the removal to the new house.

‡The late Mr. David Briggs claimed to have seen a statement that plays given there (December, 1794) included 'the Jew or a Peep into a Human Heart,' and (January, 1795) 'the Road to Ruin' and 'The Children in the Wood'. Tickets were 2/- for the pit and 1/- for the gallery.

Repairs, Alterations and Additions to be forthwith made to the Dwelling Houses for the Master and Usher . . . and to the School and Premises adjoining as may be necessary'. Doubtless these repairs had been started in good time but they were still going on when Walter came to Brigg. What he did is unknown: he may have lived as best he could amid the upheaval — to go next door to the Usher's house probably meant moving into equal confusion — or he may have found accommodation temporarily at the Angel or White Lion. The repairs went on very slowly even after his arrival. He wrote to Sir John Nelthorpe saying that 'of the garrets one is finished, one rough drawn, the other two are not yet prepared with Laths for drawing'.

Mrs. Walter and the children seem to have been left behind during this first term, but 'as soon as the inclemency of the Season would admit of our travelling,' Mrs. Walter wrote, 'he [her husband] brought a Post-chaise and four for us. On the 3rd of January, 1788 we took leave of our pleasant abode and with an aching heart, I turned my back on dear Louth and its dearer inhabitants, unable from the poignancy of my feelings to say Adieu.' Even at this stage the repairs at Brigg were not complete. 'I shall never forget what I felt after a tedious and fatiguing journey when I first set my foot into our new abode, the kitchen without a floor, the parlour in some places had paper but the greatest part of it was bare bricks. With difficulty I could conceal my tears, the place looked so desolate and miserable; but I struggled with my feelings in compliment to my dear husband who had ordered a broiled fowl from the Inn for our suppers and seemed resolved to consider everything as determined for the best.' It was not long before a more cheerful attitude was possible. Mrs. Walter found plenty of occupation in getting her house in order and by degrees became reconciled to the situation. She says they already knew some people in Brigg, Mr. and Mrs. Holiwell,* and as soon as the house was 'a little to rights' they were able to receive visits from their new neighbours.

They had brought three of their Louth boarders with them, and 'Mrs. Maddison of Gainsborough sent her youngest son to us'. In July three more boarders joined them — Grant, Booth and Brackenbury. Other boarders to arrive during the next eighteen months were Morris (Marris?), Field, Beaumont, Richard Brackenbury, Farr, Robert Booth, and Francis Bird. And in 1790 came Harneis, John Brackenbury, and Jackson. Mrs. Walter's 'Diary' is our only source of information for these names, and there is no means of knowing how long these boarders stayed. Much would depend on their ages when they came; but it is quite impossible that the Walters should have been able to house at one time all the seventeen boys mentioned above, in addition to their own family which already in 1790 included four children (they had had five so far, one still-born). The 'Diary' says (of 1791): 'our house was now as full as it could conveniently be, as we had Mr. Morehouse's eldest son, two of Mr. Robert Holgate's, and Master Nicholson from Jamaica, James Morris [Marris ?], James Stockdale, and Richard Manhood [Mawhood ?]' — eight in all, though at the same time Walter's father and mother and his sister Philadelphia stayed in the house at Brigg for a while.*

*There was a Rev. George Holiwell, Vicar of Great Limber, whom James Walter frequently assisted.

Only two other names of boarders are given by Mrs. Walter. One is Empson. The vicar of Scawby, Amaziah Empson, had, before he died in 1798† sent his sons to board at the School. The eldest had been removed 'as he had made no improvement,' but the week before his death Empson expressed regret at what he had done, adding '“ You shall keep the other two you have, and the other two shall come to you as soon as they are able.” ' ' But his death made a great alteration, and his sons were soon taken from us to the great injury of the School.' The other name is Playter. Mrs. Playter was an old friend at Lewisham going back to the days before Frances Walter's marriage. She 'sent her youngest son [in 1804] to board with us—a thoughtless and good-tempered but very ignorant lad, who was too volatile ever to attend to any business except when compelled'.

Not all the boys in the School were boarders however. In a letter to Sir John Nelthorpe a year or so after his appointment to Brigg, Walter stated that the number of scholars had risen from the original two to thirty.¹⁶¹ But, he adds, some of them were very irregular in their attendance. In between the day boys and Mrs. Walter's 'young gentlemen' came the Legsby scholars, entitled under the Founder's will to free board, lodging, and instruction. Mrs. Walter mentions these only once; but her husband found early occasion to refer to them. He wrote to Sir John Nelthorpe at Barton :‡

* 'On the last day of April we had the pleasure of receiving Mr. and Mrs. Walter senior, and Philly under our roof. They gratified us very much by continuing a month with us and were highly admired by all who saw them as a very handsome Old Couple.'

† 'An excellent Magistrate and a real Christian, firm in his friendship and indefatigable when duty called him.' (Walter 'Diary') 'He was only 43 when he died.'

‡ Sir John Nelthorpe was still at Barton although his kinsman, Edward Nelthorpe, the last of the oldest branch of the Lincolnshire family, dying while on his usual Christmas visit to Sir John at Barton 9th January. 1788, had left Scawby Hall and Manor to Sir John. (Gaze, op. cit.).

BRIGG GRAMMAR SCHOOL

' BRIGG SCHOOL, June 11th, 1789.

Sir,

I have just accidentally discovered that the poor boys from Legsby have the Itch, and Mr. Hayes* thinks that Time has made it very malignant ;† tho' it may be of bad Consequence to my Family, I sh'd not have troubled you with the Mention of it had I not wished to represent the Case of one of them for y'r Commiseration. He has been at this School 5 or 6 Years, writes well, and has gone thro' common Arithmetic, but reads very indifferently ; he is steady, careful, honest and I have never detected him in an Attempt to tell a Lie ; with these Acquirements and Qualities he might very probably succeed in a Trade, but he is not sufficiently robust for Husbandry. His Father (Wm. Millar a late Tenant of y'rs) died 16 y'rs ago without a Will, and his Mother has been married 8 y'rs to Wm. Wright (now a Tenant upon the same Farm) by wm she has Children : the Boy has no near Relation besides these except his Mother's Brother, but I sh'd not suppose his Share of his late Father's Property w'd be sufficient to bind him Prentice and that Mr. Wilbar‡ by Inquiries upon the Spot w'd be able to ascertain wt he is entitled to. I do not know that Mr. Wright has any unjust Intentions with Respect to his Son in law, but in such Situations it is better for both Parties that an indifferent Person sh'd decide between them.

' I must further observe he has had an Eruption on his Head every Spring wh. was s'd not to be infectious, but now it has attacked his Bedfellow and of course w'l prevent my receiving the former into my House again, tho' his Bedfellow (with the single Exception of conceal'g his Disorder) highly merits my good Wishes, one Effect of wh is the Trouble I now give you.

' I beg pardon for wt I am now forced upon and hope you will not disapprove of my Conduct in this Affair and am most respectfully

' Sir y'r oblig'd and obedt h'ble Serv't

' J. Walter.'

It is plain that in spite of the benevolent interest he showed in Millar, Walter was no more enthusiastic than his wife about the Legsby boys, considered as boarders.

*Presumably the elder of the Hayes & Sons, surgeons, apothecaries, men-midwives, chymists and druggists of Brigg, whose partnership was dissolved in 1813. (Lincoln, Rutland and Stamford Mercury, 8th Oct., 1813).

†The Itch was a not uncommon complaint in the eighteenth century. The Stamford Mercury advertised Bailey's Ointment for Cure of the Itch ; 1 lb. pot for two children or one grown up.

When Walter took on the Mastership of the School in 1787 he had known that its value was £100 to £120 per annum from the endowment. It was understood though that an eighteenth century schoolmaster in orders was entitled to make whatever he could out of his job and by taking on such sacerdotal duties as might offer. There were those even who urged like Henry MacNab¹⁶² that teachers should not be allowed salaries but should be entirely dependent upon fees. Such a system of payment, in effect, by results might be expected to produce efficiency. The Trustees of Brigg Grammar School seem therefore to have tacitly permitted Walter to exact entrance fees from his pupils. Even when (6th December 1808) they forbade the Master to demand such fees they still allowed him to receive them as long as they were 'optional on the part of those sending the boys'. And he seems to have continued to do so. He also received fees from the parents of boarders, though it is difficult to know exactly how much they were. Carlisle's enquiry in 1818¹⁶³ drew from Walter the statement that he took boarders at thirty guineas a year (and four guineas for Classical education). But in January 1835 Weever Walter wrote that the terms he had fixed on for admitting boys 'into my own Room' were for a single boy £7 10s. od. per annum, and where there were more than one £7 to £6 each. For the short term closing at Christmas he reckoned the just charge should be £2 10s. od. These figures seem ridiculously low; the boarding fees at Boston Grammar School in 1826 were forty guineas though by 1833 they had gone down to twenty-four guineas; at Lincoln Grammar School in 1822 they were thirty guineas; at Alford Grammar School in the same year they were forty guineas; at Gainsborough, under the vigorous and ambitious Joseph Cox they were put up to fifty guineas in 1825; and in what might have been regarded as a rival establishment in Brigg—Bennet's Academy—they were twenty to twenty-three guineas. Whatever the explanation of the difference between these figures and the younger Walter's in 1835, James Walter may not have been making very much out of that side of his activities at the end of his career.

He must have been severely disappointed with what he received from the endowment at the beginning of his Mastership. It does not appear that he received any salary for his first term's work. In fact he received no payment from the foundation until April, 1788—nearly nine months after his appointment. Even then he received only £56 13s. 4d. In a sense that was understandable. John Skelton claimed part of the half year's rent due from Fulsby at Michaelmas 1787. How much he received is not stated, but as he received one third of the year's rent paid by J. Uppleby for 'one of the School Closes' (adjoining the School), due in March 1788, he may have been awarded an even larger share of the Fulsby rent. But there is no record of how the £50 (the half year's rent from Fulsby) was allocated. Another factor which would have the effect of cutting down the Master's salary was repairs. The Master's house was being repaired when Walter took possession and although Skelton was charged with part of the cost Walter's remuneration was bound to be affected. He was fortunate in that there was a good deal of saleable timber on the Fulsby estate. This the Trustees decided at their meeting in 1787 should be sold to help pay for the repairing of the Master's and Usher's houses and the School premises. William Johnson and Benjamin Adamson of Barton had been instructed to examine the School buildings and also the condition of the estates. Edward Johnson and Sons received £84 6s. 2d. in January 1788, Benjamin Adamson £112 15s. 0d.; their bills were met almost exactly by the Fulsby timber which fetched £196 16s. 0d. But there are other items in William Hesleden's accounts for January 1788 — Christopher Handley £33 16s. 8d., Matthew Cooper £7 3s. 5½d., William Britton £5 5s. 8d. — which were probably to do with the repairs: together they would have swallowed up most of the £50 rent. Further when the mill and inn at Fulsby were let in 1788 it was agreed that the tenant should be allowed £20 out of his rent towards repairing the mill-house, and the tenant of the remainder of the land was allowed £12 12s. 0d. for repair of fences.

Walter did very little better in 1789. Until the turn of the century he averaged under £100 a year* from the Fulsby estate, and out of this amount he had to maintain two poor boys from Legsby. The signing of peace with France can have been welcomed with few celebrations in the Walter household in 1802, for this year their eldest son Henry was sent to Cambridge and they had a long string of younger children to feed and educate.† Things did begin to get better but unfortunately though prices of farm produce were rising there could be no reflection of this movement in rents till 1810, as the Fulsby lands had been let in 1788 on leases of twenty-one years. Enclosures were going on which ultimately raised the yield of this property but as was always the case there were first of all expenses to be met — and Walter had to stand them — nearly £38. From 1803 to 1809 inclusive his average payment from the Fulsby farms was £97

*The yearly figures were: 1788 £56 13s. 4d., 1789 £67 8s., 1790 £100, 1791 £100, 1792 £100, 1793 £80, 1794 £86s. 10d., 1795 £133 10s., 1796 £100, 1797 £86 10s., 1798 £113 10s., 1799 £86 10s., 1800 £113 10s., 1801 £136 10s., 1802 £136 10s., giving an average for these years of roughly £93.

†Mrs. Walter noted in her 'Diary': 'On the 14th of December, 1803, after a fortnight's hourly expectation and almost continued illness my dear Louisa was born in a great hurry at last, being my twelfth child born alive and the eighteenth time of pregnancy.'

10s. od.* Then rents were raised† and for 1810 he was paid £137, for 1811 £150, for 1812 £201, for 1813 £101 10s., and for 1814 £124 7s. 7½d. But in 1806 he had lost £32 2s. od. paid for repairs at the School; and in 1809 he suffered again as a result of the Wrawby Enclosure (1800-1805). The School's land in Wrawby parish was already enclosed but the payment required for exoneration from tithe was £95 10s. 8d., while a further £15 13s. 11d. was due as the School's proportion of the expenses of the Act. This sum (£114 4s. 7d.) had been advanced in February 1801 by Hesleden and by 1809 interest due to him amounting to £44 8s. od. had accumulated. The Trustees decided (at a meeting held 21st February 1806) that it appeared 'reasonable that Mr. Walter should be answerable for paying the interest of the Money expended in the Inclosure'. (The capital amount the Trustees were able to pay from a sum received from the Horncastle Navigation Company which had in the 1790s cut into the Fulsby land. The Company paid as compensation and interest £55 2s. 8d. in December 1804, and £184 in November 1808, making a total of £239 2s. 8d.).

After 1814 there is no record of Walter's income. The explanation must be that he collected the rents himself. The Trustees' Clerk and Receiver kept accounts for all the other properties belonging to the endowment, but not for Fulsby. Only when Cotterill took over the post of Master in 1835 did a record become available. But Walter must have done quite well judging from a slip of paper relating to the period after 1817 — perhaps to 1830. On this paper it is noted that John Small paid for his farm, cottage, etc., £183 4s. od. a year, Thomas Copping for the mill, inn, and farm £34, and William Crowder and Henry Boulton for 'building leases' £14 and £8 8s. od. respectively: a total of £239 12s. od.‡ This sum does not include what Walter made out of letting the School Closes — £10 in 1787 and presumably more after 1800. All in all Walter was now as well off as most Headmasters. Carlisle gives the Louth Headmaster's salary in 1818 as £300, but those at Horncastle, Sleaford, Gainsborough, and Boston had only £40, £24, £30, and £120 respectively. Even the bigger and better known schools did not all compare favourably with Brigg : e.g. Repton £200, Bradford £160, Shrewsbury £300, Rugby £113 6s. 8d.

†Up to 1787 the Fulsby land was let as a whole to J. Mitchell at £100 a year. Then it was divided, and Thomas Copping took the inn, mill, and land going with it for £27 a year, while John Small had Fulsby Hall farm at £73 a year. In 1810 the mill rent was raised to £34. The rest was divided: Henry Boulton had part at £8 8s. Od., and William Crowder part at £14. What John Small's rent for the rest was it is difficult to find out as he paid so irregularly, but he paid £119 6s. Od. in 1810, £115 5s. Od., in 1811, £126 in 1812, £50 in 1813 and £90 in 1814. Walter should obviously have received at least £150 a year from Fulsby.

‡This corresponds to the figure given in Carlisle (op. cit.) of £240. Walter's slip of paper may well have been drawn up in answer to Carlisle's enquiry in 1817.

For much of this middle period Walter also received the payment due to the Usher. Doubtless he appointed someone to perform the work of Usher but he did not necessarily pay him the full salary. From 1809 to 1821 Walter drew on an average £82 a year from the Ulceby estates.

From the beginning of his stay in Brigg he had eked out his income by doing duty for neighbouring clergy. He 'had done Duty at Limber for Mr. Harrison and at Somerby for Mr. Priest, at Scawby for Mr. Empson, and frequently assisted Mr. Holliwell, but had no Preferment. He one Sunday took Henry to see the Monument in Bigby Church and by that means became acquainted with the Rev. Mr. Carey, who was shortly afterwards from ill-health obliged to apply for Mr. Walter's assistance ; he died on the 11th of December 1790 and Mr. W. undertook the Curacies of Bigby and Barnetby, till he inducted Mr. [Charles Drake] Barnard to the former Living in April, 1791, and as he did not reside, Mr. W. continued to do Duty.'¹⁶⁴ He was doing duty at Worlaby in 1799 — with difficulty in the early part of the year : 'February 1799 was remarkable for a very heavy fall of snow ; it was so drifted that I [Mrs. Walter] could not get to Chapel. Mr. Walter could not get to do Duty at Worlaby.' He also had the Curacy of Elsham in the winter at one time. Not all his clerical work was done for reward. His wife's 'Diary' indicates that for the three years before February 1799 he had officiated in the Chapel of St. Mary at Brigg once every Sunday in the winter quarter 'without expectations of Fee or Reward'. He might indeed have hoped to be appointed Minister (or Lecturer) there as his predecessor James Cook had been. But during the period of Waterworth's Mastership, he being a layman and holding the position for so long, the endowment for a Minister came to be regarded as part of the stipend of the Vicar of the mother-church of Wrawby, and passed eventually completely out of the hands of the Trustees of the School to whom it had been originally given.* Mrs. Walter gave vent to one of her rare outbursts of indignation when speaking of this Lectureship : 'Mr. Hargrave [vicar of Wrawby since 1750, of Elsham since 1762, and of Worlaby since 1783] died in January [1799], and Mr. Walter was unanimously chosen Minister of Brigg Chapel on the

*In Canon Claye's Brigg Church and Town, 1904, he states : 'The Lectureship is still attached to the present Church and is in the gift of the Earl of Yarborough, the surviving representative of the original trustees, who were the same as the then trustees of the free school in Brigg. The Lectureship has been held by the first three Vicars of Brigg.' (p. 26). It was however to return to another Headmaster shortly. (See Chapter VII).

19th of February by the inhabitants who made choice of him from motives of gratitude . . . Mr. Elwes however opposed his election and consequently his tenants became very lukewarm in the business. There were two different bequests left to the Master of Brigg School as Minister of Brigg Chapel, a strong presumptive proof that the Vicar of Wrawby had nothing to do with it, but in this case as in many others, might has overcome right: and Mr. Holt had the Living of Wrawby-cum-Brigg given him by Clare Hall, and my husband was obliged to give up his claim.'

The Church had other openings to offer and Walter was able to avail himself profitably of two though only after a struggle and the generation of a good deal of ill feeling. In his will of 1669 Sir John Nelthorpe had directed that the Trustees should apply his 'Tithes of Market Rasen' and 'Tithe Beans and Pease in Barrow' to the appointment and remuneration of ministers to preach weekly sermons 'every Lord's day in the afternoon' in the parish churches of Market Rasen and Barrow. The Trustees had neglected this duty for some time and the parsons of those places had got into the habit of receiving the tithes as part of their income.* But in 1787¹⁶⁵ the Trustees announced their intention of resuming the tithes.. Naturally the move met with some resistance. The Trustees decided to take Counsel's opinion on the best way to establish their claim at Market Rasen, having decided to appoint Walter (7th November, 1789¹⁶⁶) to the 'Lectureship and Rectorial Tithes' there. Although the problem was complicated by the fact that at the Enclosure of Market Rasen in 1779 the Trustees' Tithes had disappeared with all others and lands had been allotted in their place to the vicar without distinction between rectorial and vicarial rights, Counsel (John Lloyd) maintained that the Trustees had a clear case. But he made it clear that they might have to obtain a Bill of Equity for a Commission to establish that case. The Trustees were apparently frightened off, and took the course of asking the Lord Chancellor (in 1789) to appoint Walter Vicar of Market Rasen. He would thus obtain not only the Lectureship but also the Vicar's stipend, which, as the Trustees pointed out in their letter 'will make a comfortable Subsistence for a Clergyman for which one alone would not suffice, the two jointly in our Opinions not exceeding the annual Sum of £120'. The application failed. But Walter had not long to wait. In June [1792] my husband received a letter from the Bishop of Lincoln advising him to apply immediately to the Lord Chancellor who was going out of Office† and therefore would give him the Living of Rasen. He set off for London in 2 hours after and returned in 12 days Vicar of Market Rasen. He was inducted 28th of June and read himself in on the 1st of July.' It is an illuminating sidelight on the age that neither James nor Frances Walter — enlightened and liberal in their outlook — saw anything odd in this affair.

It is fair to say that Walter conscientiously did what he considered was required of him : he went out from Brigg to Rasen every Sunday except for the three winter months. He was fortunate in that John Robinson, Rector of Ulceby-cum-Fordington went to live at Market Rasen in October 1797 and agreed to act for Walter in the winter.¹⁶⁷

More valuable was the Lectureship at Barrow. Here the Trustees had established their claim. They appointed the existing Vicar of Barrow, William Trevor, as Lecturer, but from 1787 their Agent and Receiver (Hesleden) collected the tithes for him. On his death in 1794 and before the new vicar (Cayley Illingworth)* was presented the Trustees appointed as Lecturer the Rev. Robert Nelthorpe Palmer (not without a protest from one of them, Robert Vyner, the younger, who did not approve of Palmer's moral character¹⁶⁸). Palmer obtained the Bishop's licence and at once went to Barrow where he read the service and preached a sermon in the afternoon 'by way of inducting himself'.† Illingworth made a mild protest. In a letter from Scampton to Sir Henry Nelthorpe in August 1819 he said he had taken Counsel's opinion at the time to see what chance he had of contesting successfully Palmer's encroachment, but he seemed to remember the opinion had been 'decidedly hostile' to his claim. He himself had had a somewhat insecure footing in this matter : he had not been resident in Barrow and had employed a curate there. So things stayed and Palmer received the tithes. Meanwhile these grew more valuable. In Trevor's time they had been worth roughly £110 a year though they were rising during the early years of the Revolutionary War. At the enclosure of Barrow (1797-1803) the land allotted to the Trustees in place of the tithes was 114 acres 7 perches‡ which land was let at £140 until 1797, then at £170 until 1814 and then at £185.

When Palmer died in 1821 there was a sudden crisis. The Trustees appointed James Walter as his successor. E. H. Hesleden had been appointed Vicar of Barrow in 1805 ; he had evidently endured with silent resentment his exclusion from the Lectureship in his own church and now he decided on strong protest when he was passed over in favour of James Walter. He refused to receive the £40 stipend from Walter and filed a Bill in Chancery

*Later Archdeacon.

†He did not again preach at Barrow but allowed £30—£40 a year to the officiating Minister there, E. H. Hesleden.

against the Trustees. He forbade Walter to use the Barrow pulpit and the Bishop in consequence of all this refused to license Walter as Lecturer. In his suit Hesleden argued that until Palmer's appointment in 1794 there had been no instance of any appointment by the Trustees since 1681, when Michael Doughty had been appointed — and he was already Vicar of Barrow. Moreover, he alleged, Palmer would never have been given the post but for his relationship with Sir John Nelthorpe. Besides, he alleged, Palmer had never had any intention of doing the work at Barrow, could not do so in fact because he was at the same time Vicar of Redbourne where he lived.

The suit dragged on until 1823, but the expense was more than Hesleden could afford and in 1823 the bill was dismissed without a decree. No agreement was reached although the Trustees made no attempt to pursue the Vicar for taxed costs; he however refused to receive the £40 which Walter would have paid him although he conscientiously performed the duty as Lecturer. Meanwhile the Trustees' Receiver continued to collect the rents and to retain them.

All this was doubly painful to Walter. While the contest dragged on he received no income from Barrow: after Palmer's death no payment (other than one to his widow 'by order of Sir Henry Nelthorpe' in 1825) was made until 1828. And Walter must have found it distasteful to be driven into a feud with a man who was not only the son of the former Clerk and Receiver to the Trustees (a man with whom he must have had long acquaintance) but also possibly one of his former pupils. Hesleden had done well after leaving school — he was a Fellow of Magdalen College, Oxford; he was high-minded, even though obstinate, and he was an exemplary churchman.

Walter approached Hesleden twice in an attempt to reach a settlement. On 30th November, 1821 he wrote that he had made no application for the Lectureship until he had ascertained 'from sufficient authority' that Hesleden would not be given it. 'If we can carry on this Business in an amicable Way you will find me fully inclin'd to act towards you in the most friendly and liberal Manner: but if you still persist in Litigating the Matter, surely you and I need not make it a Cause of personal Animosity, supposing we both mean only what is lawful and right.' After an interval of six years he wrote again (1st August, 1827): 'Give me leave once more to ask, whether you still persist in denying me the Use of your Pulpit, and thus depriving us both of all Benefit from the Intention of the Founder of the School, where you received your Education I have done you no injury tho' your Proceedings have essentially wronged me.' He then adopted a more minatory tone: 'You may be perfectly assured that you will in no case succeed. The late Bishop told me at Brocklesby he thought nothing more absurd than to suppose, where estates were vested in Trustees for such a Purpose, that the Incumbent could compel them to appoint him as their Preacher ; and the Present Bishop observes, that he has no power to prevent your continuing to act the Dog in the manger as long as you live '. More sorrow than anger then resurges : ' The Health and strength of us both seems fast declining, mine as you may judge from my writing,* from Age, yours, as I am told, from frequent Infirmities.† Do not then let us descend into our graves in causeless Opposition to each others Interest. — I have all along felt inclined to benefit rather than injure you, but as things go now neither of us gets anything ; remember, whilst the Lion and the Bear contended for the Kid the Fox ran away with the Booty.' Then came a final growl : ' Your successor will not owe you much Gratitude if . . . he is led into an expensive and vain Contest with so powerful a Body of Men as the Trustees of this School.' But he signs himself ' Your Friend and Servant '.

Hesleden was unyielding on essentials but in his reply (6th August, 1827) he says : ' In my answer to your first application to me . . . I express'd a hope, that my opposing your appointment would not interrupt our Friendship . . and I still hope that this Letter will tend to shew you, that my own Personal Interest, and my Duty as Vicar call upon me imperatively to prevent if possible the Alienation of a Property so long enjoyed by the Vicar of Barrow.'

Hesleden's death in 1828 resolved the conflict. The greater part of the cost of the law suit were paid out of the rents, an allowance was made to Hesleden's widow for the duty which he had been performing all this time, and Walter received the rest : £300 in 1828 and £225 2s. 1d. in 1829. He continued to receive the rents until his death, though the yield of the land had dropped after the end of the war in 1815 : he was getting under £150 a year in the 1830s and the returns continued to fall. He did not of course do the duty, but paid £50 to £60 to the Vicar of Barrow to officiate for him.

All in all Walter must have been receiving between £500 and £600 a year in his later period without reckoning what he made out of boarders. It must be remembered that there were occasional deductions from his salary for repairs. In 1806¹⁶⁹ it was ordered that ' the Repairs of the School according to the Estimates and plan delivered in this day by Mr. Walter (amounting to £48 or thereabouts) be done forthwith under his Direction '. And although it was agreed on this occasion that wood on the Ulceby estate should be felled and sold to pay for the repairs, a note was added to the Minute, ' N.B. The Wood on the Ulceby Estate has not been cut down, it being thought better to preserve the Wood on that Estate against an Enclosure.' Next day it was agreed that another £10 should be spent on repairs after Sir Henry Nelthorpe and George Uppleby had inspected the School, because they found that desks and seats needed to be renewed and a new flooring laid.

*It had been very quavery for some ten years, but Walter was only sixty-eight at this time.

It is in his earlier years at Brigg that Walter probably found life most difficult. His wife must have been frequently out of action, at any rate until 1803, and there were constant illnesses to contend with. Time and again his wife's 'Diary' refers to these: 'My little folks were inoculated and afterwards caught the Hooping Cough so that my hands were fully employed and for six months I had two children in arms' (1788); 'This [1791] proved a very unhealthy Summer and almost all our numerous family had Scarlet Fever in their turn — my dear husband was very bad with it, but the attack of the young folks was but slight — it was very fatal in Brigg'; 'this Spring [1794] our children suffered much from ill-health: Henry and Charles had repeated attacks of the Ague'; 'the measles attacked my family the latter end of the year and we had eleven children in the house with that distressing complaint a long time, but the Almighty was so merciful to us that none of them suffered very severely'; 'my three younger children took the Hooping Cough at the same time [1803]'.

And yet the family was a happy one and there were diversions — visits to Louth, Kent, Clee, or Cambridge and frequent visits from friends and relations. They had had the house slightly extended to accommodate the increasing numbers: in 1792 'the Stone Parlour' was lengthened 'as there was not room for us to dine in comfort'. All the same they must have found difficulty in housing their numerous progeny with boarders and visitors there as well. But in 1792 after a visit to Louth 'we brought Mr. and Mrs. Wigelsworth and Charles Clark back with us, and Mr. and Mrs. Harneis visited us at the same time'. In August or September 1794 'Miss Calvert, to whom I was a perfect stranger, wrote to Mr. Walter to inquire if a Governess was not wanted at Brigg and he gave her an invitation to our house till she could procure a lodging and a proper apartment for a schoolroom, and on the fifteenth of October she opened the School with five young ladies'. 'This summer [1797] Mrs. Sturtevant became an inmate of ours, till she could get a house of her own. She came to us on the 23rd of May and it was not till November that she took possession of one in the Market-place, but she was not with us all the time as she paid many visits to her friends.' The Bishop seems to have taken up his lodging with them at Confirmation time. 'Five times have we had that honour' (1797). In 1802 'Miss Holiwell . . . came to me on the 17th of May to pay me a long visit. She stayed till the 2nd of July and the week after my sister and Maria came down and were followed in a few days by Mr. Weaver Walter and my beloved Louisa. Our party was a large one and we were as happy as possible, tho' I believe almost too riotous for my brother who only spent a fortnight with us : my sister remained with us 6 weeks, during which time Mr. William Uppleby deserted his wife and left her to struggle thro' the miseries of a Sale. I offered her my house as an Asylum for herself and her eldest son, which she accepted for a few days, and her son continued with us some time.'

It is a pity that Mrs. Walter's 'Diary' does not go beyond 1809, but a letter from her to her daughter in Dorset written in August 1824¹⁷⁰ gives us a picture of contented family life in later years : 'Your brother Edward has a Cricketing Party this evening, not numerous but select.. They consist of P. Holgate, Esq.,* John Hayes, Charles Beatty, Charles Rudkin, Richard Nicholson, Fred. Goodwin [mostly from local professional families], and once I believe your father took the bat for a time. We drank tea out of doors, and I believe Edward rather wished to sup in the same place, but he will find himself mistaken, as the cloth is laid in the Parlour.' More such extracts would be welcome : she was a woman of character, spirit, liveliness, and determination, and her courage, warm-heartedness and practical good sense make her an attractive personality.

Beside her James Walter seems almost shadowy but he too made his mark and he is obviously a man to be respected. He certainly was well-liked in the district. Reference has already been made to the desire of the people of Brigg to have him as Minister of the Chapel. Shortly after his disappointment over that on the 19th April, 1799 'he had the honour (as Chaplain to the Brigg Corps†) of consecrating the beautiful Colours presented to them by Lady Nelthorpe and preached a Sermon on the occasion in Parkinson's Close before a very numerous congregation'. And he was in demand as chairman of public meetings : e.g. 31st January 1826 and 14th October 1830 when the inhabitants of Brigg met in the Town-hall to consider a petition to Parliament asking for the abolition of slavery ; and in February 1830 when a town meeting was called to consider 'the best means of relieving the necessitous poor'.

He had taken orders in the first place probably for the same reason as many other parsons : college statutes required fellows to be in orders and a fellowship was considered an essential prelude to a successful academic career. But — again as with many others — it does not follow that he felt no vocation. He performed his religious duties regularly and conscientiously to the best of his ability. He does not seem to have been affected by the Evangelical revival which was so marked a feature of Church life during his time. He was, in the main, a Liberal Churchman ; perhaps his associations with the Rev. John Emeris at Louth gives a pointer to his religious opinions. Emeris it is suggested¹⁷¹ may have sympathised with the views of a friend of his, John Disney of Panton, who later became a Unitarian minister.

But Walter was not likely to be given to introspection or theological speculation : his life was too full and too busy for that. He was no mere sporting parson but he liked sport : inevitably perhaps in a country district he held a game licence and he kept sporting dogs* ; his sporting association with Lade in his Cambridge days was evidently the expression of an abiding liking for open air pursuits.

As a schoolmaster it is likely that he was most successful in his younger days when he was vigorous and enterprising and Mrs. Walter could write in her 'Diary' in 1791 : 'Mr. Walter had for some time found he had more business in School than he could get through with . . . ; he therefore advertised for an Assistant, and Mr. Bowerbank came to him in that capacity.† The Trustees' order in 1806 that entrance fees should no longer be demanded indicates that business was still brisk. Even though Walter's energies may have declined with the passing of time numbers in the school did not. Carlisle notes in 1818¹⁷² that the Trustees had limited the numbers to eighty. That would indicate the existence of a lengthy waiting-list. The Charity Commissioners' Report of 1837 — shortly after Walter's retirement — states that there were thirty-nine names on the list when the Report was drawn up. It adds though that the Usher's or lower part of the school where a kind of elementary and commercial education was given was 'by far the most numerous'. There was a very strong demand for education in the 1820s and 1830s. Walter kept up his numbers without (it appears) any advertising, and there were other schools in the town. One of them was opened at the end of 1816 by W. Burdett. It was called 'Brigg Boarding School'¹⁷³ and charged twenty guineas a year for boarders and two guineas for day boys. It was run 'upon that celebrated system of Dr. Bell'.* Another — and longer-lived — venture was that of Francis Bennet, 'Academician', — a 'Commercial-Classical Boarding School' conducted 'in spacious premises in Bigby-street' — i.e. those now occupied by the Exchange Club.†

* 'This Summer we had a dreadful alarm and a very Providential escape as Mr. Walter's favourite Pointer went mad. He bit a pig which afterwards was affected with hydrophobia and rushed past Mr. W. and several of the Boys to do it.' (Mrs. Walter's 'Diary'.)

Walter told Carlisle in 1818 that the Eton Grammars were used at Brigg and that the system of education was intended to be the same as that at Eton College. This must have been for the Upper School only. Judging from an account of the intellectual fare of Eton boys in the first half of the nineteenth century the scope of this education was restricted severely to the classics. (Lord Eldon had of course laid it down in 1805 that it was illegal for pure 'grammar' schools to employ their endowments for the teaching of anything but the classics). All that was done was the Iliad, some of the Odyssey, some of Poetae Græci, the Æneid, nearly all Horace (suitably expurgated), Scriptores Græci ('a wretched compilation'), and Scriptores Romani, altogether a 'meagre bill of fare'. In the last weeks before the Summer and Easter holidays four of Euripides' plays were also read. Little mathematics appeared in the curriculum, and religious instruction was entirely lacking.¹⁷⁴

The system did however produce results of a sort. Scholars 'went off to each University promiscuously . . . Two late Pupils will take their first Degree at Cambridge next term, and being the foremost of their year in their respective Colleges, are expected to stand high in the University Honours. One of the Mathematical Professors in the East India College‡ was educated here, and he is also a Fellow of St. John's College, Cambridge.'¹⁷⁵

A 'poetical sketch' entitled 'Brigg' and written by J. Cooper in the early nineteenth century included among the attractions of the town

'A noble Free-school, where the classics are taught,
From which to preferment youths sometimes are brought ;
The senate, the pulpit, the bar, too, to grace,
While some in the Navy and Army they place.'

But Allen and Saunders in 1834 reported that the School did

*I.e. the monitorial system as applied in the new National Schools. It was very fashionable for a time.

†Bennet was a character. Originally a Sheffield grinder, he taught himself Latin, Greek, Hebrew, and then when he felt competent opened his school in Brigg in 1829. It lasted over twenty-five years. It is likely that the opsimathic Bennet could have taught both Walter and his successor, Cotterill, a good deal about the art of keeping school.

‡That was Walter's eldest son Henry. He was 2nd Wrangler at Cambridge in 1806. He was elected F.R.S. in 1819. (Venn, Alum. Cantab., VI). Another son, Edward, was a Scholar of Christ's College, Cambridge. He 'invented a bicycle many years before such machines came into use.' (Ibid.) Another Brigg boy who became a Scholar at Cambridge is Joseph Stockdale. He married Walter's daughter Frances (Ibid. and Mrs. Walter's 'Diary').

At the beginning of 1834* James Walter resigned. He was seventy-four and might have been pardoned for thinking a rest had been deserved. The people of Brigg may have concurred in this desire for a change but at least they did not say so, as they were to do with Cotterill and Flowers later on. Reference has already been made to Walter's quavery hand. Some three years before he retired, when thanking him for taking the chair at a town-meeting, the Rev. J. Young, Independent Minister of Brigg, spoke of him as 'our highly-respected chairman, whose venerable appearance tells us he is approaching towards the close of life'.¹⁷⁶ He retired to his living at Market Rasen and remained there till his death on 8th February, 1845. 'His loss,' said the Stamford Mercury (14th February, 1845) will be greatly felt by the poor of his parish, to whom he was a great benefactor. As a mark of respect the principal shops in the town have been partly closed since his death, and will remain so until after his funeral.' His wife lived until 1850. Both Walters lie buried in the churchyard at Kingerby, where their Stockdale son-in-law was vicar.

Perhaps it was as a mark of respect also that the Trustees decided to appoint (28th January, 1834) his son Weever Walter as his successor.† He had been born, the fourth son and seventh child of Frances Walter, in 1797. 'She noted: 'On the 29th of January my son Weaver was born rather in a hurry. I was at Chapel in the morning and he made his appearance before 5 in the afternoon''. He went to Sidney Sussex College, Cambridge where he graduated as Wrangler in 1818.¹⁷⁷ He does not appear to have had any desire to teach. His nephew¹⁷⁸ says he travelled on the Continent in his early manhood with the Marquis of Bath, afterwards putting his experiences into book form (Leaves from the Continent — and very dry they are). At the time his father retired he was Rector of Gate Burton, near Gainsborough.

As soon as he was appointed he advertised in the Stamford Mercury and the Lincolnshire Chronicle that he was prepared to receive Boarders into his house for Classical Education after the Midsummer Holidays. 'The system of Education will be similar to that in use in the principal public schools.' He cannot *28th January, 1834.

†He was christened 'Weaver' according to the Register (Vol. VI. 1749-1806) at Wrawby Church, and his mother in her 'Diary' so spells his name. He himself signed himself 'Weever.' He must have adopted the revised spelling to distinguish him from his father's elder brother, Weaver Walter. (The name came from James Walter's mother, Susannah Weaver).

THE WALTERS

have started work, at any rate seriously, until the autumn as James Walter continued to occupy the house until July.

Weever Walter began his work at Brigg by drawing up a list of ' Rules and Regulations of Brigg School '. They were :

1. All applications for admission must be made to the Head Master.
2. No boy to be admitted under eight or above fourteen years of age. Parents wishing to have a son admitted must produce a certificate of the boy's age, as well as satisfactory evidence of their having been lawfully married.
3. No boy to be admitted into the Lower School until, on examination by the Head Master, he had been found able to read words of three syllables without spelling them, and also to say by heart the Creed, the Lord's Prayer, and the Ten Commandments.
4. No boy to be admitted into the Upper School until he could read the New Testament fluently, say the Church Catechism, and work examples in the first four Rules of Arithmetic.
5. No boy to be admitted who had been removed from any other school for misconduct.
6. All boys attending the School must present themselves cleanly in their persons and apparel.
7. No boy to absent himself from school without leave from the Head Master.
8. A Register Book to be kept by the Master in which the name, age, and date of admission of each boy must be entered. The Master must also enter in the Register Book such general observations upon each boy's conduct in the School as might appear to him proper, and all serious offences and punishments. The Register Book to be open at all reasonable times to the inspection of any of the Trustees.
9. The Business of the School to commence and end each day with prayer, and a portion of the Holy Scriptures must also be read daily. The scholars must assemble daily in the School at the several hours following : viz., between the last day of February and the twelfth day of October, at seven, ten, and two o'clock ; and between the thirteenth day of October and the first of March at nine and two o'clock ; except that the School was to close every Wednesday and Saturday at 12 o'clock, and the birthdays of the King and Queen were to be observed as whole holidays ; and also except that there was to be a vacation of six weeks every summer, another of five weeks every Christmas, and another of one week at Easter.

10. Each scholar to provide for himself all such Grammars and other school books as the Master might from time to time direct.
11. The Master to be empowered to maintain the discipline of the School by admonition, punishment, and expulsion ; and he was to be responsible for the conduct of the Usher who was to be entirely under his direction and control.

The mind from which these rules emerged was plainly autocratic, loyalist, strongly moral (anticipating by quite a long time what is usually regarded as 'Victorian' morality), and firmly convinced of the importance of a religious basis for education — with, evidently, scant respect for the Eton system of education, Marquis of Bath or no Marquis of Bath. But, having drawn up these rules, and having thus rendered later generations of Briggensians his debtors by giving them the only clear glimpse of holidays, hours, and system at the beginning of the nineteenth century, Weever Walter withdrew. He obtained from Lord Yarborough the presentation to the living at Bonby in 1835 and wrote to the Trustees (8th March 1835): 'The Midsummer Holidays will commence on the 17th June, immediately after which I hope to be able to effect my removal to Bonby ; but I should wish my Resignation of the Mastership to bear date, Thursday the ninth day of July, as that will be an equitable division of the Vacation between myself and my successor.'

He had done one other thing : he had had the School and the Master's House* repaired and improved at considerable expense. From the kitchen to the stable the way had been paved with flags. Six new windows of the sash type instead of the old casements had been put in, and shutters had been provided for two of them ; the 'best Chamber had a new ceiling ; the kitchen had a new floor' and a 'complete steam apparatus for cooking' ; three 'chambers' had been 'new papered' ; two new pumps, one for soft and one for hard water, had been provided ; and a 1,500 gallon soft-water tank with proper conductors and waste-water drain had been sunk in the yard, where open drains had given way to bricked, underground ones. In the School the Master had a new desk, there was a new School gate (with oak post), and the east and west fronts had been re-pointed. Zinc spouting had been put all round the House and School. And two hundred and forty yards of iron wire fence had been placed down one side of the field behind the house. Weever Walter did not do things by halves, and the contractor (William Marshall) who did the work stated that Walter would, had he stayed, have taken down some of the premises at the back of the House — for example the 'Ogg-sty' — and repaired others.

*The Usher's House too seems to have benefited by a faint backwash of these improvements.

THE WALTERS

Note : The connection between the Walters and the immediate Brigg district did not end in 1835. Within two years the Rev. J. R. West was appointed Vicar of Wrawby-cum-Brigg. He married (13th April, 1858) Harriet Philadelphia Stockdale, daughter of Joseph Stockdale and Frances Walter, and granddaughter of James Walter.¹⁷⁹

Cotterill: Reform and Decline

WEEVER Walter had given plenty of notice before he left and the Trustees were able to advertise the post at the beginning of December 1834. They received thirteen applications (two of which were subsequently withdrawn) of which records survive, and a number of others not now known of, making a total of over forty altogether. Three applicants were practising schoolmasters though two of them could be considered automatically disqualified because they were not as the Trustees' advertisement had stated they must be, clergymen. Neither was young : one—John Skinner, Master of the Grammar School at Grimsby,—admitted that he had been 'upwards of twenty years engaged as a Teacher of the Classics and Mathematics' but felt himself the more able to 'conduct the Steps of youth through the mazes and Labyrinth of useful science, ancient literature, and modern embellishments'. The other wrote from Stowmarket that he was neither a graduate nor a clergyman but hoped the Trustees would realise that 'a well-educated gentleman who had early and long experience in teaching in schools of 'marked celebrity' must be far more 'competent to the arduous task of managing a large school, like the one at Brigg, than the generality of clergymen'. But he seems to have put his trust mainly in an appeal to the Trustees to enjoy, 'as men and Christians, what must be a high source of gratification to every generous bosom, the consciousness of having raised, from precarious and straightened circumstances to a state of competence and comfort, a not unworthy family'.

The clerical candidate with teaching experience was the Master of Wisbech Grammar School, and he brought forward a list of supporters impressive in length and quality. They ranged from the Bishop of Lichfield and Coventry through a variety of lesser clergy, and included heads and fellows of colleges, the Army, the Navy, the Law, the civil magistracy and Members of Parliament. He does not seem to have been considered. Perhaps he overdid it.

Several of the other candidates were local clergy, mostly poor curates. One was at West Halton, another was Curate of Kirton-Lindsey, another Curate of Waddingham, a fourth Curate of Barton-on-Humber, and there were the Curates of Saxilby and Heapham (and Corringham). One of these, the Rev. Robert Ousby, M.A., of Kirton Lindsey, had the support of the late Headmaster, James Walter. Curiously another who might have been expected to have it did not. He was the Rev. Walter Stockdale from Saxilby and must have been the grandson of James Walter.*

The Curate of Waddingham made every effort to get the job. He said he had long wished for a change of residence as Waddingham did not suit his wife—she suffered ‘from a nervous Affection’. To Lord Yarborough he pleaded the narrowness of his circumstances (though he had been brought up ‘with ample Expectations,’ never, unfortunately, realised) and suggested delicately that Lord Yarborough might be the friend he needed ‘for Extrication from a State of Poverty and loneliness’. He informed Sir Charles Anderson that his mother had been a niece of the late Sir Wharton Amcotts. But the fact remained that he was not a graduate. It may have been merely because (as he claimed), ‘reduced at Cambridge through ill-health to ‘the Alternative of taking a low Honour or none,’ he chose the latter. But the Trustees were unimpressed.

They decided to place their confidence in the Rev. Charles Cotterill, a young man of twenty-three. His father, the Rev. Thomas Cotterill, had been a Staffordshire man who became Perpetual Curate at St. Paul’s, Sheffield, where he died in 1824 at the early age of forty-four.¹⁸⁰ Although Charles Cotterill, one of his five children, was only twelve† then and his mother can hardly have been in affluent circumstances, he was able to go on to Cambridge (from Sheffield Grammar School, to judge from his testimonials). He entered St. John’s College as a Pensioner in March 1830, became a Scholar, and graduated in 1834. In his letter of application (not dated) he says his father had been a Fellow of St. John’s College and had engaged for many years in literary and scholastic pursuits.‡ Furthermore he had educated his son Charles from childhood for ‘the particular profession which I am now seeking to enter’.

At the University, Cotterill said, he had won his ‘public Scholarship’ at the first time of sitting; he had been four times placed in the first class of his College; he had taken the degree of Senior Optime and ‘had the additional honour of appearing on the Classical Tripos’. As he had assisted his brother, Mr. T.

*Whatever else James Walter did he certainly supplied the country well with clergy—a dozen or so, going down to the third and fourth generations of his family.

†He was born 15 January, 1812.

‡Thomas Cotterill wrote Family Prayers (which went through several editions) and Selections of Psalms and Hymns.

Cotterill, Fellow St. John's and resident tutor there, with his university pupils he could claim to be not without 'personal experience in teaching'. And his brother had 'pledged himself [should Charles be successful in his candidature] that he will, from time to time, deliver such lectures to the Scholars as would render the School most efficient'. As at the time he was applying, he was a candidate for a Hebrew Scholarship at Cambridge, it could be seen that he satisfied the Founder's requirements (that the Master should teach not only Greek and Latin but Hebrew). And—perhaps as cogent an argument in his favour as any of the others—he would also be able to bring some 'highly respectable gentlemen's sons as boarders: he trusted that that would be considered a further means of promoting 'the respectability of the School'. The only draw back to his candidature in fact was that he was not in Holy Orders. That however was merely because he had taken the degree of B.A. 'a year before the regular time'; he would be ordained 'within a few months'.

The Rev. J. F. A. Burnaby of Newark, supporting¹⁸¹ the candidature of his friend, '“a Staffordshire gentleman,”' urged that Cotterill came of a very talented family: not only his father and his brother had distinguished themselves academically but his cousin too was expected to be senior Wrangler that year. He also disclosed that Cotterill was about to marry a sister of his (Burnaby's) wife's. There seems no doubt that Cotterill was the obvious choice: young but about to be married (and therefore the better able to run a boarding-house in a school) and with high academic qualifications.* He was appointed at the Trustees' meeting (held 'in the Schoolroom') the 12th March, 1835.

The Brigg to which the new Headmaster came was acquiring a new look. It is doubtful if any great alteration had taken place during the previous century, apart from the building of the turnpike houses at the canal or 'New' bridge and at the eastern end of the town at the ends of Wrawby Street and Bigby Street, 1756-8, and the re-building of the County Bridge in 1828, but now there was a flurry of public as well as private building.

Of one kind of public building—the tavern or public-house—there had been no lack in Brigg. In 1841 Pigott's Directory listed three inns (the 'Angel,' the 'White Lion,' and the 'Lamb') and sixteen taverns.*

*It is not impossible that a talk he had with the Trustees' Clerk, Nicholson, at the time of his application, should have helped him. He offered to give £20 towards the building of an additional Schoolroom for the accommodation of 'such gentlemen's sons as might wish for instruction near home'. He would allow the use of a very good library; and he would teach French as well as 'the usual routine of School education'.

The 'White Lion,' or as it was now more often called, the 'Lion,' had been re-built in 1833 together with the shop forming part of the same building and lying to the west, nearer the river. It was hoped that as Miss Walkden was to retire from the neighbouring 'Angel' after nearly thirty-seven years there, the 'Lion' would capture much of its trade, and when Christian Johnson took over the improved and renovated 'Lion' he solicited the patronage of the nobility, clergy, commercial, agricultural, and other gentlemen at his inn where there was accommodation for families, stabling for twenty-nine horses, lock-up coach house, box-stalls for hunters, and a service of coaches which ran 'to all parts of the kingdom,' while posting at 1s. 3d. a mile could be had by chariot, post-chaise, gig, hearse, or mourning coach. Evidently Mr. Johnson met with a disappointment: he was bankrupt by 1837.

Since 1700 Brigg's religious life had centred on the small Chapel of Ease and the Friends' Meeting House, both in Bigby Street. The religious revival which was to be noted everywhere in the country had already caused an Independent Chapel ('Calvin Chapel') to be put up in Wrawby Street in 1813. Now in the late 1830s it was coming to be felt that a bigger, more dignified, church was needed for Anglican worship; and the Methodists were active, seeking to erect two places of worship in Brigg. As a consequence, as was noted by a writer in the Stamford Mercury of 1842 (30th December) and 1843 (1st September), within two years a church, a Wesleyan Methodist Chapel,[†] a Primitive Methodist Chapel, and a Catholic Church were built.

The old Chapel of Ease, St. Mary's, had for some time been recognised as inadequate for Brigg. It was small, it was unimpressive, and its dependence on the church at Wrawby, a mere neighbouring village, offended the developing civic sense of the inhabitants of Brigg. As an additional source of discontent with the chapel the inaccuracy of the chapel clock was cited.¹⁸² This clock was always either too fast or too slow. It had been made by Harrison, the inventor of the chronometer, and was said in its better days to have been most reliable, but now it was worn out. Matters were not improved, it was hinted, by the failure of the person who had 'the management of this most important piece of machinery' to attend to his duty properly. Hence over a period of ten days it had always been at least twenty minutes behind the mail time, to the great inconvenience of the public.*

A few years earlier there had also been the 'Bacchus and Tun,' and in the Market Place a public house called first the 'Old Ship' and subsequently the 'Bricklayers' Arms'. And by 1849 was to be added the 'Nethorpe Arms'. In 1851 the population of Brigg 'with its suburbs' was 3097.

A subscription list for the building of the new church was opened, headed by R. C. Elwes (who also supplied the land required in addition to that already occupied by the chapel). He subscribed £50, the Bishop of Lincoln £20, and Sir John Nelthorpe gave the stone for the building, while Lady Nelthorpe sent a donation later to help bridge the gap between funds collected and the cost of the building. Nicholson and Goddard of Lincoln were commissioned to plan the church. The building was opened for worship on the 14th March, 1843. A complaint was promptly sounded that the preacher was inaudible except to those in the 'higher seats of the synagogue'—near the pulpit. Further evidence was given of keen interest in religious matters by the outraged protest in the local press at the Puseyite notoriety which was being attached to the new building by the Vicar (the Rev. J. R. West) and the 'Lecturer of our church'. It may be that this latter was the Headmaster, Charles Cotterill, but no other reports give this view any backing. West, however, was certainly a keen supporter of the views of Pusey and Keble, and his enthusiasm afforded endless topics of scandalised conversation to his parishioners for years.

Although the Lord of the Manor does not seem to have approved of the Vicar's 'goings-on' the Elwes family took an interest in the church, and it was Miss Elwes who was largely responsible for the erection in the church in 1852 of an organ built by Walker of London. Miss Elwes had taken on the task of training the choir and generally acted as musical guide.

Another aspect of ecclesiastical vitality is revealed by the opening in 1855 of a new Church School in Brigg (on the site now partly occupied by the County Library) with fifty-five scholars. It is not known how Cotterill viewed this venture but he probably regarded it as undesirably competitive, at least as far as his own

*Over ten years later this difficulty over clocks still persisted; the difference of time between the east and west ends of Brigg (again according to the Stamford Mercury, 27th August, 1852) appeared to be the equivalent of several degrees, and the only mode of regulating the house clocks was to listen for the arrival of the railway trains. This report says much for the nineteenth century reputation of Manchester, Sheffield and Lincoln Railway.

Lower School was concerned. It might also have been construed as a vote of no confidence in his ability or desire to give Christian instruction to the boys of the district.

Brigg's civic and social life was next catered for. The Town Hall had been put up some time at the beginning of the century. The Stamford Mercury speaks (25th August, 1818) of work going on slating 'the new Town-hall'. Public meetings were held there (such as those over which James Walter had presided to record the town's disapproval of slavery), and dances were held on occasion,* but the building was ludicrously small.† And although Brigg no longer enjoyed the position it had held before enclosures deprived the rabbits once swarming on Lincoln Heath of their homes and the Brigg people of occupation in skin cutting and the allied trades, the town was establishing itself as a market for coal, corn, and timber. This commerce had grown since the Ancholme had been widened, deepened, and improved in 1828.‡ Hosts of waggons laden with corn were said to be continually pouring into the place and were making of Brigg a first class corn market, drawing merchants and millers from all around. The coming of the railway in 1847 emphasised the need for accommodating these people on Market Day. The result was the appearance of the Corn Exchange, opened on 20th June, 1850, an asset to the town although the corn dealers before long began to find it convenient to transact their business even nearer to the 'Angel.'

One of the first signs of the new times Cotterill found when he came to Brigg was the introduction of gas-lighting. There was so much enthusiasm for gas-lit safety and convenience in the streets that within twelve hours of the formation of the company all the shares had been subscribed.¹⁸³ The excavations were made at the end of Bigby Street and the gas works were soon to be seen on the site (given by R. Cary Elwes) now occupied by the Brigg Rural District Council offices. There the works remained till they were transferred to their present site in 1849.

Another, but to the poor of the time, not so welcome indication of the things to come was afforded by the erection of a Union workhouse in Brigg in 1837. By the 1834 Act a Poor Law Union workhouse had to be provided for this part of North Lincolnshire, and Brigg was chosen as the most convenient centre. As soon as the Guardians were elected they chose Nicholson of Lincoln as their architect, and to his plan which appealed on account of 'its convenience and simplicity of design'¹⁸⁴ the workhouse was built. It is doubtful if Cotterill as he looked out from his house thought so highly of Mr. Nicholson.

*There was usually an Assembly at Christmas time with dancing from 8 p.m.

†It was increased in size somewhat when a shop at the end of it was incorporated in the building in 1878.

‡John Rennie was the engineer in charge of the works.

Probably no change made more stir in Brigg during these middle years of the century than the coming of the railway, the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway (whose initials were said by cynics in its early days to stand for 'Money Sunk and Lost').* The town had hitherto been well served by coaches running along the Lincoln, Brigg, Barton turnpike road. A Directory for 1826 stated that coaches ran from the 'Angel' and 'White Lion' inns in alternate weeks. The Royal Mail to London left daily at 10.30 a.m., and that to Barton and Hull at 4.30 p.m. The 'Express' coach followed the same route rather earlier in the day. And from the 'Angel' the 'Safety' coach ran daily to Barton to meet the Royal Charter Steam Packet. The journey from London to Barton took twenty-two hours. In the early 1840s besides the Royal Mail coaches to London and Barton there were the 'Express' and 'Magna Charta' and 'Imperial' coaches running to Nottingham and Leicester.

But the public-service coach was now on its way out : the mail coach stopped running through Brigg in the middle of November, 1848 and from Saturday the 18th November when the 'Imperial' performed its last journey from Barton to Lincoln, Brigg ceased to have any public conveyance to Lincoln, and the 'cheering Horn' as the Stamford Mercury called it, was heard no more.†

Since the summer of 1848 engineers had been busy with their assistants at and near Brigg, staking out the railway line ; work began on the Kirton tunnel and on the construction of the two bridges over the old and new River Ancholme. By August, 1841 it was reported in the Mercury that railway locomotives were by this time a common sight in North Lincolnshire : three had passed through Brigg, each drawn by upwards of thirty horses. The station and goods shed at Brigg were almost complete, and a year later on 22nd September, 1848 an engine arrived there with two first-class carriages for a journey to New Holland. Crowds assembled—but merely to witness, not to travel. The train was a special for the use of the chairman of the railway, Lord Yarborough, his wife, and a few others. (The 'beautifully constructed station at Brocklesby' had, according to the Mercury, 'been erected principally for the accommodation of the Earl of Yarborough'. And it was for his benefit, the paper added, that an express train was run day after day in early October to and from New Holland.) It was not until the 1st November that the railway was opened to the public. From then Brigg began to face not north and south but east and west, especially after the taking over of the dock at Grimsby by the railway and the improvements made there in 1852, transforming Grimsby from a small, sleepy coast town to a thriving port. It still took eight hours to get to London even from Lincoln ; but there were five trains a day each way between Grimsby and Manchester (with three on Sundays), and by express the journey from end to end could be made in five hours.

*It was the 'railway mania' of 1845-6 which produced this line. Lincolnshire had been largely untouched by the earlier railway developments.

†One consequence of the change was that the Lincoln-Barton Turnpike Trustees lost heavily. In 1842 it was stated that their income from tolls for the previous year had been £2,208 13s. 4d. Their income from the same source was £1,688 9s. 1d. in 1850. (Turnpike Trustees' Minutes at L.A.O.).

Brigg's development during these years was mainly along the turnpike road. The Poor Law Institution represented the farthest extension towards Barton up to 1837. But Brigg now began to swell itself to fill the gap. For years there had been talk of providing Brigg with a police-station but it was not until 1846 that anything was done about it. In August 'Dent, the contractor' began to produce a building 'adding much to the improvement of this entrance to the town. According to the plan it will not only possess a very neat appearance, but will be a substantial building, combining a room for the conducting of petty sessions, governor's residence, and ample accommodation for evil-doers.'¹⁸⁵ In November Brigg had a salaried, resident 'chief-constable'—Inspector Potton. The unfortunate Brigg tradesmen who had hitherto had to allow themselves to be elected constables must have welcomed the arrival of a professional.

The building fever was now infecting many. For centuries Brigg had been huddled round the Market Place and the three roads leading from it ; and even along these roads the builders had not ventured far. A housing shortage began to make itself felt. Only a few 'little back tenements' were said to be available for letting. The solution of the problem lay in the hands of the principal land-owners. They now started to release land for building, Sir John Nelthorpe on the south side of the road between the two bridges, and R. Cary Elwes at the east end of the town near the railway station. The gas company was given notice to quit the site by the road leading to the station in 1849. Two-and-a-half acres of the Elwes property here was offered for sale. On the plots sold all the buildings—residential and business—between Cross Street and the Toll Bar (now the Monument cross-roads) and bounded by Wrawby Street and Bigby Street were rapidly to be built. Two years later (1851) the land along the modern Albert Street was sold and houses arose along this street. It was to be fifty years nearly before anything like this activity was to be seen again in Brigg. Meanwhile, in keeping with the growing importance of the town and from a sense of civic obligation as well as of a need to keep up with the Joneses some of the Market Place shopkeepers were installing plate-glass windows. Finney the draper and Robinson the watchmaker both provided themselves with 'splendid large plate-glass windows, equal to most in large towns'.

Regrettably, however, certain sections of the population were less conscious of their duties to their neighbours. For no idle reason had the yearning for a police house and lock-up been growing. In 1838 the local press was complaining of 'yellings and fighting at night'. Three years later it was alleged that the adoption of rural police in other counties drove shoals of beggars here from districts better watched. And in 1843 the complaint was made that the Act of 1839 increasing the number of constables was a dead letter as far as Brigg was concerned. Drunkards were to be seen rolling along the streets with perfect impunity; 'numbers of persons calling themselves men congregate on the bridge and in other thoroughfares on a sabbath, and so completely block them up that all respectable females who are passing to the places of worship are compelled to turn aside or bear their indecent insults'.¹⁸⁶

By the middle 'forties matters were even worse. Doubtless the influx of 'navvies' into the town for work on the railway added to the problem but it was admitted locally that the 'navvies' were not the worst characters in the town. These (many of them lodging in the courts north of Wrawby Street), it is true, could be troublesome, as when in the summer of 1847 at Brigg Races the arrest of a 'navvy' for violent conduct led to a riot. The 'navvies' and 'miners' gathered together and threatened to destroy the police station.¹⁸⁷ Again at the end of the same year a number of 'strolling navvies' entered the 'Black Bull' about 11.30 p.m. and having blown the light out began a fight in the tap-room.¹⁸⁸ And it may have been a 'navvy' (though he was simply described as an Irishman) who was seized by the constables for maliciously setting his dog upon the scholars of the Grammar School as they were returning home, and causing several of them to be severely bitten.¹⁸⁹

The principal charges against the natives of Brigg, however, were not of violence but of immorality and drunkenness. A correspondent in the Mercury referred to them as the Nebuchadnezzars of the town who have rendered themselves mad by worshipping 'too enthusiastically at the shrine of Bacchus' and who 'exhibit a . . . remarkable affection for "kind-hearted ladies"'. It is interesting to note that a drunkard was exhibited in the stocks in the Market Place for six hours on the 23rd October, 1849.

It may be confessed that this exposes a somewhat unattractive side of Brigg (though Charles Cotterill, having had experience of Sheffield, was probably not too much outraged); but there was another and more dangerous aspect of Brigg, connected closely with the overcrowding and lack of sanitation in the old part of the town. Cotterill with his school and family well away from this area may not have worried though there was ample cause for anxiety all round. How the outbreak of cholera which was so bad in 1831 failed to strike Brigg is a matter for wonder, so numerous were the 'public and private nuisances'. It was reported in the early part of 1845 that small-pox was raging in the town: 'it is a long time since the town was so unhealthy'. One can hardly be surprised.

A medical report on the state of the town three years earlier¹⁹⁰ speaks of a row of 'paupers' houses' by the 'town drain' in the middle of Brigg, a drain which was never cleaned and which was full of putrid animal and vegetable matter. The report refers to the consequent prevalence of fever in the town. In the height of the summer of 1847 a writer in the Mercury called attention to iron beams overhanging the path in Wrawby Street with 'sheep's carcases and bloody heads suspended'; but the nuisance to which attention was here drawn concerned not contamination of food but the possibility of receiving 'bloody faces, bedaubed apparel, or destruction of the best beavers'. Yet the same paper in the following year castigated those responsible for the 'filthy stench in the lanes and passages in Wrawby-street' as also responsible for the outbreaks of fever there. And when in 1852 it reported that the jury of the Court Leet meeting at Brigg considered Brigg healthy and clean, it commented that some kind friend must have arranged the jury's visit, and went on to speak of 'the poor Irish tenantry . . . wallowing in mire and filth . . . To give a detailed account of the Irish locality, both as respects its sanitary and moral condition, would be really disgusting'.¹⁹¹

Some attempt was made at reform: new sewers were being laid in the main streets in 1849; better water was being provided. During the first half of the century most Brigg people got their water from a pump at the end of the town known as 'Wharf well,' but there were other wells used in spite of the fact that they were considered unfit for domestic purposes.¹⁹² In 1852 C. Cary Elwes got an act of Parliament for the setting up of water works, the supply coming from St. Helen's, Wrawby,¹⁹³ and as a result the laying of main water pipes in the streets was beginning in 1853.

And yet, in spite of the calamitous state of affairs in Brigg in the first half of the century, cheerfulness was always breaking in. There were opportunities for sport and entertainment locally, and life could be enjoyed. For years there had been local cricket clubs. In 1826 the 'Scawby and Brigg Cricket Club' is reported as playing Louth both at home (in Scawby Park) and away, losing both matches. Scawby was evidently a thriving centre for cricket. In 1834 and in 1842 the club there is referred to as the 'Scawby Cricket Club,' Brigg having fallen by the wayside. Broughton had its cricket club in 1842 and by 1847 the game had evidently revived in Brigg, though a correspondent in the *Lincolnshire Chronicle*¹⁹⁴ said he never expected to see the 'Brigg party' come off conquerors (against Caistor) 'as their play and display are alike notorious'.

There were horse-races in the field at the corner of Bigby High Road and Westrum Lane. There was a Choral Society; and there was a theatre. The races were held only infrequently, usually in August, but they seem to have drawn crowds. Whether the Choral Society had a continuous existence it is difficult to say, but in March, 1837, the society was reported as having given its second 'miscellaneous' concert that season. So well had the performances been attended that even the 'passage leading to the orchestra' had been occupied.¹⁹⁵ In 1852 it was stated that the Choral Society had recently undergone reorganization* but that it intended to give a concert of vocal and instrumental music in the Corn Exchange in July. And finally the theatre had at any rate a period of vigorous existence. In 1844 the Mercury announced that 'Mr. Bullen with a select but effective company has opened a theatre in Brigg for a short season'. But it added lugubriously that it was unlikely to prosper in a place where a church and two chapels had been built within the space of two years. The Queen, '“defender of the faith”', might support the theatre, but there were priests who condemned it as an anti-Christian amusement and unfortunately the major part of their flock seemed to be coming to the same opinion. 'Puseyism teaches everything of Popery except its toleration of rational amusements.' In spite of this jeremiad the theatre kept open for a time, being patronised by the Duke and Duchess of St. Albans in May, 1844, and Lord Worsley being about 'to give the comedians his patronage'. Although Mr. Bullen's visit was not repeated there were others. Life did not need to be dull however unhealthy it was.

Cotterill cannot have had much capital and he was recently married, but he ran into expenses straightaway. Weever Walter's alterations had produced bills amounting to £190 6s. 6½d. He had acknowledged to the Trustees that he had gone beyond what he had been authorised to spend but begged for their sympathetic consideration.† Clearly Cotterill should bear some part of the charge as he would benefit by them. On the whole the Trustees did not act unfairly in deciding to charge Walter and Cotterill each with half the cost, and to make to Cotterill an allowance of £50 from the 'General Fund' (i.e. the money accumulated in the

†He knew there was a considerable quantity of saleable timber on the Fulsby estate and he hoped to persuade the Trustees to use that to pay for some of the repairs and alterations. (Letter from him to the Trustees dated 8th March, 1835). They however had other plans for it.

COTTERILL: REFORM AND DECLINE

Gainsborough property account). Even so Cotterill must have been appalled to learn that out of his first quarter's salary £45 was to be deducted—especially as¹⁹⁶ the Trustees had now decided to pay the Master only £200 a year out of the Fulsby estate revenue, in quarterly instalments. He must have protested. In any event at their next meeting (in August 1835) he was allowed another £25, but this time at the expense of Walter.

Money was only one of his early difficulties. He took over control at Brigg at a time when reforming winds were assailing all the established institutions. Cotterill was upright, sincere, young, and therefore in no way to be held responsible for the state of things at Brigg Grammar School, but this school was one of the institutions due to be investigated and Cotterill was to have some uncomfortable moments in consequence.

For some time the Edinburgh Review and Radicals like Brougham had been itching to start an enquiry into the way the endowed grammar schools were being conducted. There was ample need for it, probably as much at Brigg as in most places. It was not until 1837 that the enquiry reached the School and by that time there was nothing—if indeed there ever had been—outrageously scandalous to be uncovered. Nevertheless there were criticisms.

The Charity Commissioners¹⁹⁷ agreed that Cotterill was 'in every respect qualified' for the situation he filled and that the Trustees had carried out their duties faithfully. They had, it is true, failed in one respect: they had not insisted on the retirement of headmasters at the age of forty-five, but 'the inconvenience of this regulation is obvious, for although it may be highly desirable that the master should retire when no longer capable of discharging properly the duties of his office, it can hardly be contended that at the age of 45, he is (if in other respects unobjectionable) incapacitated from attending to the duties of the school; no retiring pension is allowed, and indeed the income of the charity is insufficient to supply any such provision, and it is not to be expected that any person of education and talent would accept the situation of master, with the understanding that at 45, he was to be turned into the world without any provision whatsoever for his future maintenance'.

Then the Master came in for criticism. It was recognised that owing to the size of the population of the parishes entitled to send their children to Brigg School free of payment, the Trustees had had to limit the number to be admitted to eighty. The Master kept a book recording applications for admission, and as vacancies occurred, those at the top of the list were said to be admitted in succession. 'Complaints were made that the master did not act quite fairly in this matter, but the complainants failed in making out any specific case. The system, however, of allowing the master (who, as will be seen, has an interest in admitting the children of some parents rather than others) is objectionable, and the trustees have been strongly recommended to direct that in future applications for admission shall be registered with their clerk and reported to them at their half-yearly meetings, together with the number of vacancies at the school, when they can exercise their own discretion as to the party to be admitted, in preference to leaving the selection in the hands of the headmaster. It was also represented that the master bestowed more care and attention upon the education of some children than of the others, and that he was in the habit of receiving a gratuity from the parents of the children thus favoured for this extra service; and the master, in fact, admitted that he did receive such gratuities, and that a distinction was made in the school in favour of those children whose parents were in the habit of paying. It was not contended that any fixed charge was made, the payment in all cases being voluntary, and the amount according to the pleasure of the parent.

'We think this practice highly objectionable, for the extra care and attention bestowed on those who pay, is so much care and attention withheld from those who do not pay; it also induces the master to admit, by preference, to the school, the children of such parents as are in easy circumstances, he having a well-grounded expectation that such will pay something for their instruction, to the prejudice of the poorer class, who by the founder's Will have an equal claim to be educated; nor can it be contended that the master has a right to make use of his spare time, for if he has time to spare, the number admitted to the school, which always falls far short of applications (there were 39 names on the list at the time when this report was drawn up) should be extended, the only justification than can be made of the limiting of the number being, that the master and usher are so fully occupied that there is no possibility of them educating more.'

No exception was taken to the separation of the school into the Master's and the Usher's divisions. That was to be attacked later with the development of egalitarian views but the Commissioners in 1837 were concerned only with ascertaining how far the existing rules were being obeyed.* Consequently they merely observed: 'The school, for the convenience of education, is divided into two, the headmaster . . . attending to one part which may be called the upper school and instructing such children as require it in the course of a classical education; and the lower school which . . . is by far the most numerous, in which the scholars are taught reading, writing, and arithmetic, and the usual course of what is usually considered a commercial education.

*Unlike the 1864-7 Enquiry which was intended to provide completely new schemes of education.

Children are not admitted under the age of seven years, nor is it usual for them to remain beyond 14; no rule, however, has been laid down in respect to this latter point.'

When the Commissioners came to look into the question of the Legsby scholars they found something into which they could get their teeth. They found that two boys from Legsby (Fulsby never having as far as could be determined set up any claim to participate) had usually been boarded and lodged in the Master's House and clothed by him.* But they added with more than a suspicion of asperity: 'The parish officers of Legsby . . . were by no means satisfied with the treatment their lads received from the master, they being employed by him in performing various menial services, in sweeping the school and waiting upon himself and family; we immediately applied to the master, Mr. Cotterell [sic], for an explanation . . . and . . . received from him a letter wherein he states that in the "above respect he only followed the good example of his predecessor"'. (In another place he called it 'the judicious plan'). The Commissioners left no doubt anywhere that they entirely disagreed with Cotterill in thinking such an example good; they stigmatised this procedure as a 'malpractice,' regretted that it should have been going on for so long (as it undoubtedly had: there can be little question that James Walter had inherited the 'good example' from Skelton and one can only guess who originated it). They took up the matter with the Trustees and spoke so strongly that they regarded the continuance of the practice as unlikely.

They went on to make specific recommendations concerning the number of Legsby boys. As nearly £100 a year was available to be spent on them there should be six boys—'even if [they] were treated as they ought to be, and as we conceive the founder intended that they should be'.†

In the main it was sufficient for the abuses to be brought into the light of day for them to cease. But public opinion, though effective then as now, takes a little time to operate. The Com-

*It may be remembered that Mrs. Walter referred to 'the two Legsby boys' in her 'Diary'. It is a reasonable assumption that from the setting up of the School there had always been at least two boys from Legsby in the School. Reference has already been made (Chapter II) to the mention in the Legsby Register of the 'two boys [who] may be sent to Brigg School from Legsby'. These boys incidentally received not merely 'meat and drink and Lodging' but also 'Education in Latin and Greek and writing and Arithmetic whilst fit for Any bisnesse'. This was in 1712 in the reign of James Cook.

missioners had with courteous discreetness assumed that where the administration of the charity was entrusted to 'parties of such high character' as the Brigg Trustees it was requisite only 'to point out these abuses to ensure their immediate amendment'. They were over-optimistic. In 1843 the Trustees, meeting at the Lion Hotel in Brigg, considered a memorial from the Vicar* and inhabitants of Legsby¹⁹⁸ complaining of the continued ill-treatment of the boys sent to the School from Legsby. It was alleged for example that William Prescott who first went 'to Brigg School at August Fair 1839' had then two suits and two pairs of shoes, but when he went back (presumably at Christmas) his clothes were in rags; he had then only one pair of shoes and they were in holes. Another boy, George Cressey, was said to have to work in the garden before school in the morning, from 6 to 7 a.m. in the summer, and from 7 to 9 a.m. in winter. Sometimes he had breakfast before school but at times he had to eat it in school hours. He always dined by himself. He was always at work in the garden when not in school. He had also to clean boots, shoes, and knives, and to feed the cows and pigs. Not merely had he to clean the shoes of the Master and his family but even those of the servant maids.† Thomas Thompson, tailor, was said to have made no clothes for the Legsby boys from April 1840 to May 1841 and the clothes he had supplied from May 1841 to the end of 1843 had cost only about £7. At times, it seemed, Cotterill's cast-off clothing had been used for the Legsby boys' suits. The other point was made that under the will of 1669 the Legsby boys were entitled not merely to an elementary education but to instruction in Greek and Latin. The petitioners (having ascertained from the Charity Commissioners the value of the benefit intended to Legsby and Fulsby) suggested that a school should be built in Legsby and a master supplied from the endowment.

The Trustees' reaction was to summon Cotterill to appear before them the following week and, after hearing what he had to say, to record their view that the boys from Legsby had been 'too much employed in menial offices by the Master'.¹⁹⁹ They looked at some of the accounts for clothing supplied to the boys since April 1840 and said they thought the clothing had been insufficient. And they decided to have a new system, worked under rules which were to be drawn up before their next meeting.

It was unmistakably a rebuke for Cotterill, not much softened by the Trustees' rejection of another grievance advanced in the *Field Flowers.

†Cressey was a pathetic case. He had been taken from the 'Union.' He had no home, and during the holidays he returned to the 'Union.' It seems extraordinary that Legsby should have sent workhouse boys to the School, but, they said, 'even our paupers refuse to let their Children go [to meet ill treatment at Brigg] and we are . . . compelled to send a Boy from the Union Workhouse at Caistor'.

memorial : namely that one of the Legsby boys had contracted the Itch at school and had been sent home with it. They admitted that the boy had had it while at school but not when he was sent home. Cotterill was stung by the Trustees' censure to further research and at the next meeting (13th January, 1844) he produced more bills for clothes supplied to the Legsby boys and persuaded the Trustees to agree that 'there had not been so great a deficiency of Clothing as they had believed'. But the Trustees insisted on the adoption of rules for the admission of 'the poor boys from Legsby'. They were :²⁰⁰

'The Trustees will provide for three boys at the School, viz : two from Legsby and one from Fulsby; or three from Legsby in the absence of proper applicants from Fulsby. They are to be poor Boys of good character, and their age at the time of admission, must not be less than nine years nor more than eleven.

'The Trustees will pay out of the rents appropriated for that purpose, for each of such Boys who may be at the School, Twenty-five younds per year and in proportion for a portion of a year. The year is to consist of the usual periods during which the School is open. The Boys are to be sent to School and taken home at the Midsummer and Christmas Holidays, at the expense of the parents or Guardians. For the above payment the Master or Usher is to provide for such Boys, Lodgings, Diet, Books, House Linen, and the washing of it.

'The Trustees will provide medical attendance, and clothes and the washing and mending thereof. The Boys may be employed, out of School Hours in moderation, in Gardening and in the Fields.* In case of vacancies in the number of Boys at the School, the Clerk to the Trustees will give Notice of the Circumstance at Legsby and Fulsby.

'Applications from Parents or Guardians of Boys of good character, for their admission into the School, are to be sent to Mr. Hett, the Clerk to the Trustees, at Brigg, stating the name and age of the Boys, and the occupation of their Parents or Guardians. The Trustees will decide upon the applications, after making due inquiries, and seeing the applicants at Brigg.

'Each Boy is to be sent to School with a Suit of Clothes, and, two Shirts, two pairs of Worsted Stockings, one pair of Boots, one Hat or Cap, two handkerchiefs.'

The Trustees then went into detail about the clothing to be supplied to the boys once they had been admitted—clothing to be

*At this Cotterill must have exhaled contentedly. But he must have wondered what all the fuss was about. The Legsby boys were still employed in the garden during their spare time and in 'rendering services' to the Head Master in 1876.

furnished at the beginning of the year (the Headmaster to be responsible for seeing that each boy took care of the clothes and to report deficiencies and injury to them) :

‘ Cloth Jacket and Waistcoat (blue) and Oxford Mixture Trowsers.

Fustian Jacket and Waistcoat and Cord Trowsers (drab).

Two Pairs strong Boots.

Three Calico Shirts.

Three pairs Worsted stockings.

Hat and Cap.

Two black Stocks.

Three Pocket Handkerchiefs.

Pair of Gloves.’

They even went to the extent of naming the suppliers of the articles and services mentioned. Mr. Thomas Thompson, tailor, was to provide all except boots, and he was to mend all clothing except shirts, stockings and handkerchiefs, to wash all clothes ‘ which require washing,’ and to provide braces and pay for hair cutting. For these services he would receive £6 a year (of which £1 was for washing). Mr. Thomas Smith undertook to supply and mend the boots for £1 10s. a year.* And Mr. Paterson was to provide all necessary medicines and medical and surgical attendance to the three boys for £5 a year.

As an after thought they added that each boy must on admission be given a Bible and Prayer Book and a pair of braces,† a hair-brush and comb and ‘ a small tooth Brush and Comb ’.

The only alteration in the rules affecting clothes came in 1864²⁰¹ when the Trustees ordered each of the Legsby boys to be given a suit of clothes immediately after Midsummer and Christmas in each year. The fustian was dropped in favour of tweed (though the drab cord trousers remained); and each boy was to have four instead of three pairs of stockings.

From 1844 the system seems to have worked satisfactorily. The Clerk, rather than the Trustees, had the task of deciding which boys should be admitted. His choice usually fell on those with at least the rudiments of education, but he was also influenced by whether the boys who appeared before him seemed quiet, well-mannered, and good-tempered. Usually he chose well but the occasional troublesome boy got in. In 1867 after some unpleasantness about a watch and chain Thomas Waller and †The braces seem to have crept in twice.

Elijah Rands had to be made to forswear evil companions and conform to the Master's wishes.

There were always three Legsby boys from 1844 to 1846, and four from 1847 to 1855. In that year the number was reduced to three and at that it was fixed till 1859.* From 1860 to 1863 once more the number was four and it fluctuated fairly frequently from four to three for the rest of Cotterill's time. Cotterill received additions to the £25 a boy from time to time when he urged that the cost of provisions and of coal had gone up e.g. 1847 and (after a reduction in 1850) 1854; but at the end of his period of office he was being paid only £1 a year more for each boy than he received in 1844. It is of some interest to note that the cost of books for the Legsby boys was once as low as 3/- and never rose above 15/6 however many boys there were.

The Legsby subject bulked formidably under Cotterill but it was never more than an irritation and a distraction from his main work, that of giving Classical instruction. He announced in the Stamford Mercury (31st July, 1835) that the School would re-open after the holidays on Monday, 3rd August and that he was prepared to take boarders; for those under thirteen the fees were £40 a year, above that £50. By the end of the year the fees had been revised: under fourteen, forty guineas, above fourteen, forty-five guineas—with no extras except for washing. 'The course of instruction comprises the Latin, Greek, French and (if required) the Hebrew Languages, with Mathematics, Writing, and Arithmetic.' How many boarders he had is unknown but in 1856 White's Lincolnshire stated that there were thirty boys in the Upper School as against eighty in the Lower. As Hagar & Co.'s Commercial Directory for 1849 gives the average number of pupils as eighty, the School must have prospered in the 1850s. A decline had set in by the 1870s and in 1872 there were said (White's, 1872) to be only twenty in the Upper and forty in the Lower School.

In October, 1841 Cotterill prepared a set of rules (with the approbation of the Trustees) for the notice of 'parents . . . of boys attending, or wishing to attend Brigg Free Grammar School'.

- Rule 1. Each boy to be provided on his admission with a Bible and book of Arithmetic; the latter to be obtained at the School.
2. Each boy is expected to attend School, neat and clean, at the appointed hours : viz. 7 and 9.30 in the Morning, and 2 in the afternoon, in the summer; and 9 in the Morning and 2 in the afternoon in the winter.

*White's Lincolnshire, for 1856 notes reprovingly, but inaccurately, under 'Brigg' that the Master received £230 p.a. from Fulsby, Horncastle, and West Ashby out of a total income of £300, and that half this latter sum ought to be appropriated to the maintenance of Legsby boys.

3. No boy to be allowed to absent himself (either with or without the consent of his parents or guardians) except from illness, or on Market Day; of which due notice must be given to the Master.

N.B. A half-holiday in future on Thursday and Saturday afternoons.

4. Copy books, pens, ink, etc. to be purchased from the Under Master at the usual retail prices.
5. Each boy in the Lower School to pay 1½d. per Calendar month, for the use of reading-books, etc.; and each boy in the Upper School to pay 3d. per Calendar month, for the use of books, maps, etc.

Want of strict attention to these rules will be punished after due notice given by expulsion from the School.

Earlier in the year, however, another important change had been decided on, possibly at the instigation of the Usher, Barrett, but at any rate with the support of the Trustees.²⁰² That was to adopt for the Lower School the British and Foreign School system of education—the monitorial system which had won such approval in the 1830s as a cheap way of creating a literate population and, it was hoped, a sober, orderly one. A number of grammar schools took it up, but it was not liked by parents,²⁰³ and it can never have been very efficient. However in 1841 off went Mr. Barrett to London (at the Trustees' expense) to arrange about the necessary books and equipment—two hundred Tables, Dictating Lessons, Arithmetic Frames, Copy Slips, and so on. And in the School a new partition with a sliding door in the middle was made separating the Usher's Department where ten semi-circles were cut in the flag floor, the old desks and forms were taken out and new ones fixed (literally). The old desks and forms needed renewing but the new system was to prove radically faulty. The fixing of seats, each on an iron standard let into the flag floor, caused a lot of damage as the flags were thin and although the standards were let into the flags with lead, constant movement by the boys soon loosened them and broke the flags. Attempts to solve this difficulty by letting each of the loose standards in to a block of stone merely broke up the floor still more.

It is plain from the Minutes (30th September, 1847) that the system of instruction was no more effective* than the new seating,

*In 1842 a contributor to the Mercury declared that the 'free-school at Brigg' had of late been rendered far more beneficial to the town and neighbourhood as a result of the British and Foreign system. It is to be feared though that his article was mainly intended to be a means of countering the efforts of the Vicar of Wrawby (J. R. West) and his Curate who were said to want to have a National School where High Church or Puseyite principles could be taught. (Lincoln, Rutland, and Stamford Mercury 8th July, 1842).

and Cotterill was able to persuade the Trustees to adopt a new system in that year.

The new plan affected both parts of the School, its object being declared the improving and raising of the 'tone of education' in the whole School. In the Upper School all were to receive 'such an amount of instruction in the Latin language as is necessary for the thorough understanding of their own language'. Boys already in the Upper School were not expected to find their own Latin books : they were in the main to be instructed viva voce from the books in the Master's possession; but newcomers must buy their own Latin Grammars 'and other elementary Latin books' and a book of English poetry to be learnt by heart. The rest of the Upper School curriculum was to be English Composition, Mensuration and Land Surveying, and elementary Algebra and Geometry.

In the Lower School besides Reading, Writing, and Arithmetic 'as taught as present,' English Grammar, English History, and Geography were to be taught 'thus raising the Lower to the present standard of the Upper School'.

Once more there was a rearrangement of the School room, a new flag floor being laid; a thick wooden partition now divided Upper from Lower,* the Usher's desk was moved from the centre of the west end into the northwest corner of the school, and the iron stove was moved to the east end of the school.

Like his predecessor, Weever Walter, Cotterill went in for extensive changes and repairs in the Master's House; and William Marshall (carpenter of Broughton) and Clark (bricklayer of Broughton) who did the work sent in bills which enable us tentatively to decide how the house was arranged. The work cost nearly £100 but it was claimed that it was 'very requisite' for it to be done : the room the Master was using in part as a study was very damp, the floor being flags and in a decayed state. The 'chamber' over this room was extremely cold; the back kitchen, stables, and outbuildings generally were badly in need of attention. (These latter were what Weever Walter would have pulled down). The plan on page 145 indicates the possible geography of the house and the principal changes.

Nearly all such repairs as these were now paid for by the Trustees — but out of the estates: from 1841 they kept a special account into which were paid the proceeds of all timber sales, amounting to nearly £400 by 1876 ; and from 1863 both masters were compelled to forgo 5% of their salaries (a contribution reduced to 2½% in 1867) to provide a Repairs Fund.

*The Usher's room was twice the size of that of the Master's according to the Schools Enquiry Commission Report, September, 1868.

Cotterill's salary fluctuated considerably from 1838 to 1876 : at times, e.g. 1850, help had to be given to the Fulsby farmers in making improvements such as draining ; the same year called forth a request from one of them for a return of some of his rent because the times were unfavourable to agriculture ; and plain bad luck caused an uninsured farm house to be burned down in 1864 and a cottage at West Ashby to fall down. So the highest figure received, and that only in two years, was £280, and the lowest £164. The lean years were from 1860 to 1876 ; but the average income was just under £220. On top of that Cotterill received the money for boarding the Legsby boys ;* and he had, at least in the earlier years, other boarders, though there were none in 1868 ; he had what he could make out of the closes of land attached to the School ;† and he had his Brigg Lectureship. That had at last returned to the Master of the School in 1837, and Cotterill retained it until 1872‡ when, presumably, he was induced to part with it in order that the stipend of the new Vicar of Brigg might appear slightly less ludicrous. But the Lectureship brought in no more than £30—£50. He seems also to have had a local curacy worth £48 a year.²⁰⁴

Whether the decline in his income caused him to lose heart or whether, obeying some law which caused eighteenth and nineteenth century Masters mysteriously to lose their zeal after so many years, there can be no knowing, but by 1868 things had grown so unsatisfactory that a movement arose to get Cotterill out of the School. He had had his opponents and detractors ever since the first days of the Legsby 'scandal', when one of them²⁰⁵ referred to the Legsby boys as 'little slaves' who had required emancipation, and hinted at other sins of which Cotterill could be accused, though nothing was to be said for the moment because 'charity is the greatest' of the three virtues. That is not to say that he was generally disliked: rather the majority of people in Brigg seem to have felt kindly towards him. It was simply that, by 1876, the conviction had established itself that neither he — nor the Usher — could be usefully retained on any terms.

However popular Cotterill was it would have made little difference. An atmosphere had been created by the 1860s, affecting the whole country, in which few of the old-established grammar

*He estimated the profit from that when there were four boys to be £10 a year.

†He stated that the House and garden were worth £30 a year and the School fields £32 a year.

‡This statement is based upon Venn, Alum, Cantab. and Claye's Brigg Church and Town (1904), p.35. But Cotterill in his letters concerning a pension in 1876 speaks as though he still held the Lectureship, although, he thought, he would have to resign it as soon as he ceased to be Head Master.

schools could survive without radical changes. It simply could not be maintained that many of them were efficient ; nor, founded in sixteenth and seventeenth century England, were they capable of adapting themselves to vastly changed conditions. This was made amply clear by the Endowed Schools (or Taunton) Enquiry, conducted 1864-7, which examined eight hundred endowed grammar schools and found most of them wanting. Mr. H. W. Evc, one of the Assistant Commissioners, came to Brigg and his Report was published in 1868.²⁰⁶

Dispassionately he described the School as ' semi-classical ' in character, and placed it in the second grade.* In some ways he found it hard to classify ' owing to the different stations in life of boys '. The School had, he said, seventy-six day-boys and four boarders (Legsby boys†) in 1864.‡ The day-boys paid nothing except 1/- for firing and 1/- for cleaning — how frequently was not stated. There were no examinations or prizes. Punishment consisted of impositions, detention, and caning; ' the last publicly; done by [the] head master only '. The school year had forty weeks. During the summer there were thirty-six hours of study each week, and in the winter only twenty-eight. For boys who learned Latin there were also two hours' preparation each day.

He tabulated the ' School Instruction ' system, showing that eighty boys were divided into four classes for Religious Knowledge and Arithmetic, and ten boys into three classes for Latin four and a half hours each week. (Only one boy did Greek; that was Cotterill's son and he was reported to be ' fairly grounded ' ; he also ' construed a passage of Cicero . . . with accuracy and some taste '. Thirty boys in two classes studied Physics six times a week from various compilations '. There were two Mathematics divisions to accommodate twenty-five boys (using Todhunter's Algebra and Euclid for ten lessons a week). Four boys only learned French (for a charge of £4 a year) for two hours a week : their text books were Arnold's First French Book and Fénelon's Dialogue des Morts. Thirty boys formed one class to study English Grammar, History, Geography.

The standard (apart from young Cotterill) was deplorably low. ' All but the head boy were absolutely ignorant of the simplest facts of geography'. The discipline of the Upper School was only fair; that of the Lower was bad. 'It should be said that the lower school is limited to the labouring class; boys of higher social position are taken at once into the upper school'.* The root trouble, thought Mr. Eve, was that eighty was far too high a number for two masters.

*That meant that the leaving age was about sixteen.

†These boys lived with the servants in the kitchen and waited at table. They had ' not separate beds ' and the room used as their dormitory for thirty years was ' small and ill-ventilated '.

‡Cotterill does not seem to have had many fee-paying boarders. The Census of 1851 showed that besides the ' Foundation Scholars ' of whom there were then three : Valentine Richardson, John Wood, and George Malam, Cotterill had only three boys described as ' scholars ' in the house. They were Robert Garner, Francis Hastings, and Charles H. Brookfield. All were nephews of Cotterill. Perhaps three of Cotterill's sons should also be described as boarders: all were described as ' scholars. ' Their names were Charles Clement Cotterill, Alfred Cotterill, and Henry Martin Cotterill. The ages of all these boys ranged from five to thirteen.

It was not long before the Report produced a fermentation. The process may have started here with an article in Blackwood's on 'Country Grammar Schools'²⁰⁷ which singled out Brigg as an example of the small country schools which found it difficult to provide a large enough class of boys taking classics (the basis of a liberal education: ' "When the classics are neglected, the education seems lowered in character" ' ; where Latin is not taught, other subjects are rarely well taught). The first sign of action to be taken locally was a Memorial — and a spate of letters — to the Trustees collectively and individually. The 'inhabitants of Brigg and Scawby' asked for an investigation. One of them complained specifically that though his son had been two years with Cotterill he had not until the last half year had a sum examined by any master and he was worse in arithmetic now than when he first went to the School. There were many more complaints.

The Trustees went into action; the wheels turned only slowly and with some difficulty in Whitehall, but by February 1869 the Education Department had agreed to send Mr. C. H. Alderson 'without expense to the public' and in his private character only. He inspected the School and reported (16th March, 1869).

His Report did little but underline the weakness pointed out in the previous year. There had evidently been some improvement in the classical department where two boys construed from Cicero and three from Caesar† with adequate accuracy and in a tolerably fluent manner. For the rest there was little comfort offered. The discipline of the School was once more condemned: too much noise and too little animation. And this time Cotterill received an assault from a different side: his time-table was a 'remarkable document' with no fewer than six or seven subjects taken in the course of the three hours of Monday, Wednesday and Friday mornings, some of them receiving only a quarter of an hour. And 'History with Parsing' for half an hour struck the Inspector, understandably, as a little startling. The existing arrangement of subjects confused the mind and memory and left only a jumble of many subjects instead of a solid, clear knowledge of any.

*The Report showed however that the fathers of the ten highest boys in the School were: clergyman, gentleman-farmer, druggist (2), lawyer, gardener, innkeeper (2), shoemaker, and grocer; while the ten lowest boys had as fathers: gentleman-farmer, innkeeper, labourer (3), clergyman, shoemaker, gamekeeper (3).

†Cicero's De Senectute and Cæsar's Commentaries.

Finally he repeated the previous criticism that there was a superabundance of boys.

Cotterill defended himself as best he could.²⁰⁸ He agreed that it would be better to have only twenty-five boys to one master, but how was that to be achieved without an undesirable drop in numbers unless fees were charged to pay an additional master? Discipline he admitted was difficult in the 'confined space and inconvenient arrangement of the Schoolroom'; but all he could suggest was to throw the two rooms into one, abolishing the distinction, largely social, between Upper and Lower Schools. Three classes could then be formed but the use of monitors would have to be resumed.*

Fighting a rearguard action he survived another seven years. But he was harried. Reports were made in 1870, 1872, and 1876. He strove hard to give satisfaction and he received an occasional commendation: the instruction in Latin and French was very careful in 1872, and there was no more evidence of vigour in the running of the School. But the School still lacked system. After the last Report the writing was on the wall. It agreed that there was evidence that thirty years earlier both masters had taken pains to visit famous schools and training institutions in order to qualify themselves for their work; but 'the weariness that comes upon men who have been keeping school for forty years'²⁰⁹ and the lack of strong motive for action meant a daily decline in the School's usefulness. With a feeling of relief almost Cotterill sent in his resignation (on 8th June, to take effect from 11th October, 1876). He secured a pension of £90 (he had asked for £150) and retired to his native Staffordshire. He became chaplain to the North Staffordshire Infirmary and remained so until he died at his home in Prince's Road, Stoke-on-Trent, 27th February, 1881.†

It was like the extermination of a prehistoric monster. He had for some time been an anachronism: he belonged to the age of the Walters and the Skeltons. But there was pathos in his passing: he had started with such enthusiasm and high hopes but turned into 'a severe pedagogue'²¹⁰ whose 'final instrument of torture' was said to be a yard of horse's trace²¹¹ and who, it was

*The Minutes of 13th November, 1871 order the removal of the screen 'from one side of the entrance to the Schoolroom to the other side so as to enlarge the Master's school, and to provide a new curtain in lieu of the old one'.

†He has an anonymous memorial in Brigg Parish Church, though a somewhat drab one. When in 1872 the old stained glass in the East Window was removed to the other end of the church, three new lights were inserted at the east end. The centre light was the gift of Charles Cotterill and his family. It was designed by W. White, F.S.A. and depicts the Resurrection and Ascension. (On the sheet of paper used by Cotterill for the list of boys in the Upper School, Thomas Freer, Agent to the Trustees, has added, 'Foundation Boys: William Robinson, Walter Vickers, George Chapman.' All appear to have been in the Lower School.

The Ushers and their Estate 1805-1876

SIR John Nelthorpe's foundation at Brigg was always comprehensive, providing both a classical and an elementary education. The ironical thing was that up to 1835 the Usher in charge of the elementary side was expected to be a clergyman who could give at least the rudiments of instruction in the classical languages, but was criminally underpaid ; whereas after 1835, when all that was either looked for or offered was the merest ability to teach the three Rs, the Usher's remuneration rose until it almost equalled that of the Master.

It is not therefore surprising that after the death of the Rev. John Border in 1806 there seems to have been difficulty in finding a suitable, enduring successor. Border had been either slack or ill and had for long been little use at a schoolmaster before he died: Bowerbank had been recruited as an assistant to Walter in 1792 and he was still at the School at the end of 1801, to judge from an entry in Mrs. Walter's 'Diary'. But from 1802 Mrs. Walter states that her sons, Henry and Charles, her future son-in-law Stockdale (then a boy at the School) and another boy, Danby, had by turns officiated for Border. Charles indeed had been such a success and had managed the Lower School with such attention and 'propriety' that the place was completely changed. He was only a boy though* and the work tired him out. The result was that soon after Border's death (April 1805) another advertisement was put in the papers announcing that there was vacant at Brigg the post of Usher, carrying with it £46 a year, together with a dwelling house fit for the reception of boarders. The duties, as was proclaimed, were 'more particularly' to ground boys in English Grammar, Reading, Writing, Arithmetic in all its branches, and Land Surveying, also to prepare in Latin Grammar and 'the first books afterwards most usually read' those designed to read Classics ; all this on a plan approved by the Head Master. Applicants were expected to be in Holy Orders and must produce proper testimonials as to their moral conduct and their ability to teach.

*He had been born in August, 1787.

THE USHERS

The man appointed (date unknown) was the Rev. Isaac Tyson. Border's widow received the Usher's salary up to May, 1805; then Charles Walter received the next year's salary; and Tyson's first payment was £23 for the half year up to Martinmas, 1806. Mrs. Walter said that Tyson's countenance did not prepossess her or her husband in his favour but as physiognomy had never been a favourite study with her she refused to pay too much attention to the disagreeable impression, and, she averred, resolved 'to show him and his numerous family every civility in her power'. Tyson had eight children 'not a bit more polished than those of the humblest cottager'. On his salary and with his family he must have been hard put to it to manage, especially as he had to pay for fixtures in the house left by Mrs. Border.*

Tyson drew his salary (now increased through a rise in rents): he received £52 11s. od. for 1807 and exactly £60 for 1808. Then he withdrew and in November, 1808 the Trustees agreed to allow Walter to choose his Usher subject to their approbation. Walter's response was to appoint no Usher at all — at least officially. For the next twelve years Walter always received the rents from the Usher's estates at Ulceby, and as the effect of the Napoleonic War was to drive them up, from £60 to £92 in 1815 and then £98, he did well out of the new arrangement. It may be surmised that during at least part of this period he used older boys to manage the Lower School.

In 1821 he returned to the original scheme and the Rev. Thomas Watson was appointed Usher. All that can be asserted with accuracy about Watson is that he received payments as Usher from 1822 (January) to 1836 (August), that he acted as curate at Searby from September, 1816 (and possibly earlier) until September, 1835, when he became Vicar of Kirmington, and that he remained (as his tombstone in Kirmington Churchyard testifies) Vicar there until he died on 3rd August, 1858 at the age of seventy-five. Not only did he officiate at Searby (only five or six miles from Brigg) but he also signed the Register of Baptisms at Brigg from 27th September, 1816. There is thus a strong presumption that he may have been acting as Usher as early as 1816 without being officially on the staff. This possibility is fortified perhaps by the entry in the Charity Commissioners' 1837 Report that the exact date of Watson's appointment could not be ascertained but that he had held the situation for many years. Before he came to Brigg he had been under the Rev. John Banks at Boston Grammar School for three years and was strongly recommended by Banks for the post at Brigg.²¹² Banks's widow many years later referred to Watson as 'an . . . able Usher'.²¹³

*Mrs. Border eventually solved her domestic worries by marrying, at the Catholic Chapel in Brigg in November, 1809, Mr. Francis Meynell, an elderly farmer of Worlaby. (Lincoln, Rutland and Stamford Mercury, 10th November, 1809).

He seems to have suited Walter, and if the report made by Archdeacon Bonney (in his Church Notes) on 1st August, 1846 is anything to go by, he may have been a good schoolmaster. Bonney found everything at Kirmington in good order (except for two privies against the North side [of the Church] 'I must order to have removed'); the man who could keep himself alert and efficient in a small country parish when he was not young was the sort of man to take his schoolmastering seriously.

If he did it was decidedly not because of adequate financial reward. In the year 1822 he drew £73 10s. from the Ulceby estate and the following year he was down to £66 15s. His average was about £80 until 1832; after that (for reasons to be mentioned later) he went down with a bump to £60. There was little likelihood of any increase for many years: small wonder, therefore, that he retired to a living.

The post was advertised in May, 1836; no more was demanded this time than a competence to teach English Grammar, Reading, Writing and Arithmetic, and testimonials as to moral character. A number of men sent in applications in ornamental handwriting ranging from the insipid to the flamboyant. One had had a stroke when a child and wrote left-handed: he hoped that was no barrier; another had been 'in the habit of teaching for some years'; a third pledged himself to spare no exertion in the difficult occupation of 'rearing the tender thought'. The one who was appointed (Trustees' meeting on 28th June 1836) was John Brindley. He had been running a private school for a few months but probably wanted security: he had a wife and small family (about to be enlarged). He also was looking for the opportunity to increase his income by private tuition or work in an evening school.* The Trustees intimated that one way of making money was by taking boarders. They put the Usher's House into a proper state of repair (at the expense of Watson); and in March, 1837 Brindley advertised in the Stamford Mercury that he would receive into his family six pupils for instruction in the usual branches of classical and commercial education on the following terms: under twelve, twenty guineas a year; over twelve, thirty-five guineas, (each young gentleman to be provided with sheets and towels—to be returned); French and Drawing, each four guineas extra.

But Brindley cannot have met with much success: he resigned in the Spring of 1838 and until his place was filled the new Master, Cotterill, had to rely for two months on the help of Thomas Spring of Brigg, described as 'schoolmaster'. Twenty applications came in response to the new advertisement in 1838, one from Spring, whom both Cotterill and the 'inhabitants of Brigg'† recommended. Most of the candidates were normal and probably competent, though there was one pathetic letter (postage unpaid as the poor man said he had scarcely any money to buy absolute necessities), admitting that he had had complaints of his severity and confessing that he had been 'subject to make use of the thrashing machine too heavily', but saying that he had lately read a good book—on moral influence.

*He had also been recommended for the 'strictest proprietary of conduct.'

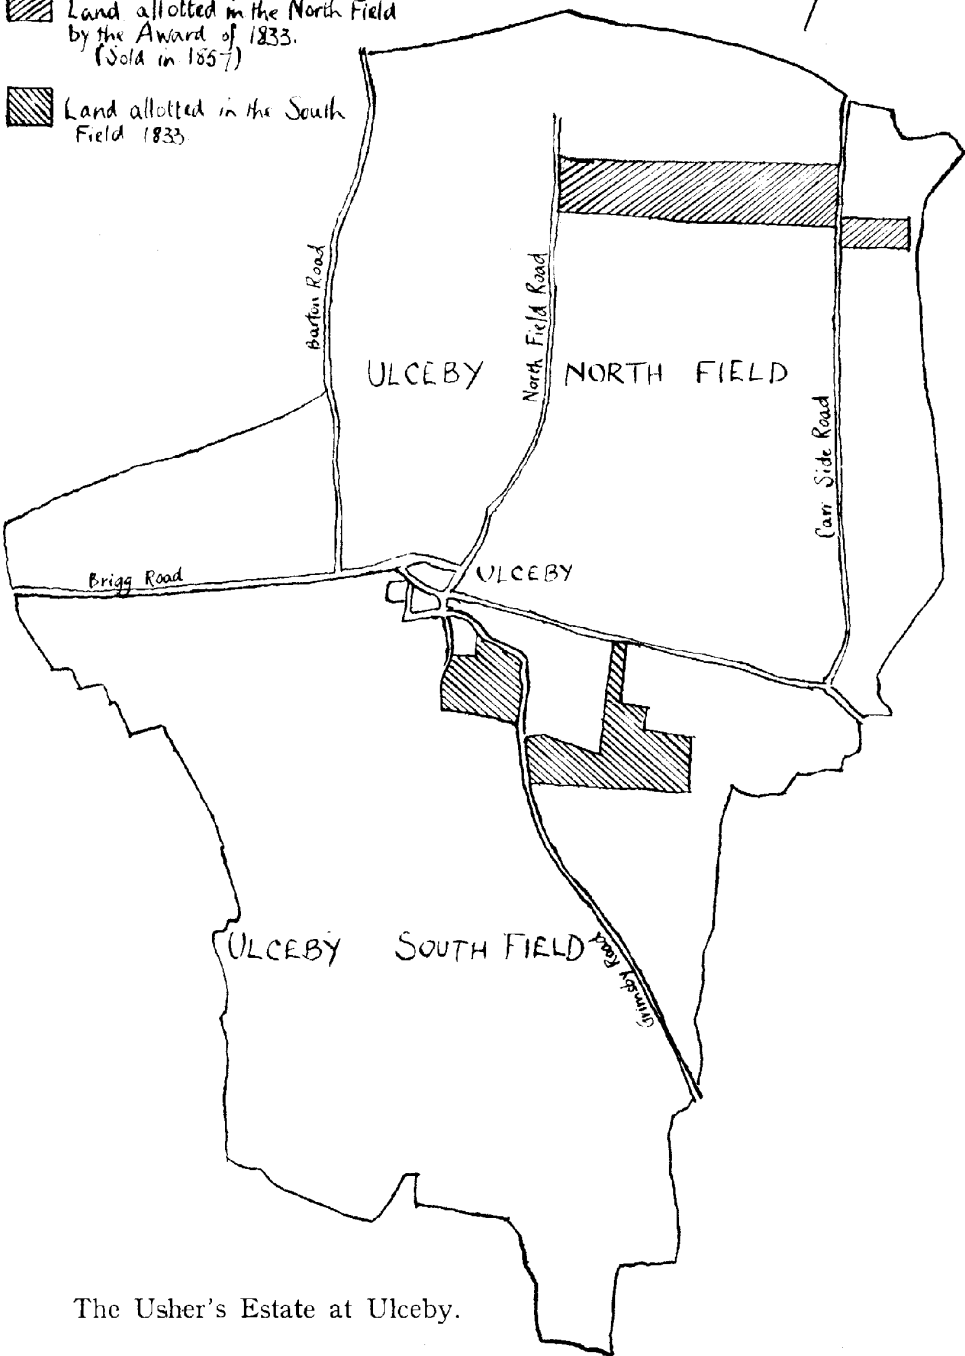

†These were the fifty-five parents of children at the School.

The outstanding candidate was William Barrett of Hull, recommended by the widow of the late Rev. John Banks of Boston Grammar School with whom he had been for some years, and by the Rev. Thomas Watson, on the strength of the Banks commendation. He was nearly thirty-two and had good experience of teaching. He was appointed at the Trustees' Meeting on 28th August, 1838. He was the last Usher of the School: he stayed until, with Cotterill, he suffered the axe, 1876-8.

When he took office the Usher was as badly paid as he had ever been*; and the Usher's estate was yielding more than it had ever done before. This paradox sprang from the enclosure of Ulceby.

The story of the enclosure is worth a little attention if only because of the anxiety and fret it caused to a number of people, because it caused the Charity Commissioners in 1837 to come as near as their gentlemanly caution would allow to accusing the Trustees of mismanagement or neglect, and because it led to the first diminution of the original endowment.

Enclosure at Ulceby came relatively late in the day.† There seem to have been several false starts. Notices were published in the Stamford Mercury in November, 1802 and May, 1803 of meetings to consider an intended enclosure at Ulceby. Then there is silence until Hesleden added as a footnote to the Minute of the Trustees' Meeting, 20th February, 1806 that the wood on the Ulceby estate had not been sold as ordered because it would be needed to help pay the expenses of an enclosure. But nothing happened until 1824 in which year on 28th May an act to enclose Ulceby and drain it and exonerate it from tithe was signed by the King.

The Commissioners were appointed: John Burcham of Coningsby, Philip Skipwith of South Kelsey, and Joseph Whittaker of Morton, Nottinghamshire; the Surveyor was William Harrison of Scamblesby. They announced their intention to hear in June and July, 1824 the claims of the land owners and commoners so that they could begin their work of dividing the open fields (still worked in strips) into consolidated holdings.

*Barrett may have hoped to take a few boarders, but the 1851 census showed that he had none then. That is not surprising as his house had to contain besides himself, and his wife, five children and a maidservant.

†Over three-quarters of Lindsey had been enclosed by 1830, mostly in the period 1790 to 1810 when prices of wheat were high. (Swales: 'Parliamentary Enclosures of Lindsey' Arch. and Arch. Soc. Rep. XLII (ii).)

Most of this work must have been completed by 1825 but the enclosure dragged on in spite of that and the Award was not signed and published until 1833. Nine years was not by any means exceptional for an enclosure. Most enclosures took only one or two years, but the most notorious locally was the Horncastle enclosure which occupied almost the whole of the first half of the nineteenth century, taking forty-eight years. The enclosure at Grasby lasted thirty years. Grimsby's enclosure took thirteen years, and Kirton Lindsey's eight.²¹⁴ It is difficult to point to any one reason for the delay at Ulceby. Several factors seem to have worked together.

For one thing there were forty-two freeholders concerned in the Ulceby enclosure, a comparatively large number the hearing of whose claims and objections inevitably consumed much time. There were no rules binding the Commissioners to meet at fixed intervals : they preferred to use the summer months when the days were long and the weather clement, understandably since they frequently had to make long journeys on horseback along inferior roads.²¹⁵ It is easy to imagine how the matter could have dragged on for a long time : an alteration for example in the Commissioners' disposal of the allotments occurred four years after the work had begun.²¹⁶ If there happened to be a very troublesome occupier the proceedings might be considerably prolonged. There was such a man at Ulceby—the Rev. Rowland Bowstead, Vicar of Ulceby. He had been Headmaster of Caistor Grammar School since the end of 1802 and had been presented to the living at Ulceby in 1818, he maintained, so that after a lifetime spent in the unendurable toil of schoolmastering he might find a comfortable haven. But owing to the machinations, he alleged, of Burcham, who was also Steward to Lord Yarborough (one of the most extensive occupiers at Ulceby) his and the Church's interest had been seriously damaged and there would be little for him to look forward to on retirement. He kept up a continuous, though unavailing, skirmish culminating in the printing of a pamphlet in 1833. He lost. But he delayed action.

Another cause of the delay in signing seems to have been that one of the Commissioners—Skipwith—withdrew,* and another man, John Shillito of Bury St. Edmunds, had to be appointed. The dominant Commissioner and perhaps chief cause of the prolongation of the enclosure was Burcham ; he was too much of a professional and was greatly in demand in the drawing up of awards. The consequence was that he had too much to do ; he may in addition have been a slow worker or inclined to delay : it can be no coincidence that in all the really long enclosures

*The Award says he declined to act any more after February, 1825. Bowstead affirmed that it was a protest against the injustice being done to the Vicar.

BRIGG GRAMMAR SCHOOL

(including Grasby and Horncastle) he was involved.²¹⁷ The other man, Shillito, wrote to his fellow Commissioners on 10th April, 1826²¹⁸ that he had been unable to work since the beginning of December because of eye trouble. But by October, 1828, Shillito was beginning to show annoyance²¹⁹: 'whether you [Whittaker] or him [Burcham] see the necessity of having this business brought to a close I know not—all I know is such a mode of proceeding . . . in this part of the Kingdom [Suffolk] would not be tolerated'. Later he describes the delay as 'a disgrace to us all'.²²⁰

And finally the fact that the man appointed as Assistant Surveyor was James Bradley may have helped to lengthen the enclosure. He was engaged in seven enclosures between 1815 and 1836²²¹ in addition to his work at Ulceby, and must have found difficulty in fitting them all in.

Eventually in 1833 the Award was completed. For the School it had been claimed that it held in the open fields 232½ acres together with one Common-right House or Toftstead and 16 Beast Gates and 16 Horse Gates over the fields, commons and waste. And the Trustees had asserted their right to the fifth part of a manor in Ulceby (a right which seems to have had an undoubted existence in the seventeenth century). Jonathan Field, however, (who with Lord Yarborough and William Wood claimed to be lord of a manor there) contested this claim and it was disallowed. As the acres claimed for the School were reputed acres it is not surprising that on measurement the total was much reduced. Reputed acres were often only half acres in actual extent, having in the past often merely corresponded to strips. So the total land allotted to the School in 1833 was 172 acres 2 roods 27 perches in twelve parcels the biggest of which was 91 acres 2 roods 38 perches in the North Field, though there were three in the South Field of 20 acres 2 roods 14 perches, 29 acres 36 perches, and 14 acres 32 perches respectively. (The allotments as a whole were let in three 'farms.')

Now enclosures were expensive and of course the occupiers had to foot the bill. By 1825 the Trustees had had to find £668 14s. 6d. as their share of the cost of getting the Act passed, and paying the expenses and allowances of the Commissioners* and Surveyors. But further expense was unavoidable: the allotment in the North Field was about two miles from the town where all the houses were and a new house had to be built for the tenant, Mrs. Davey. That was completed by 1826 at a cost of £512.

*The Commissioners each received three guineas for every day spent on the enclosure. The total of the 1st Rate (8th April, 1825, was £11,287 17s. 6d. made up as follows: Public Roads, Drains and other works £6,494 0s. 6d., Parliamentary Fees £334 12s. 0d., Solicitors' Bill £1,139 0s. 9d., Commissioners £1,241 11s. 0d., Surveyors £1,000 0s. 0d., Clerks to Commissioners £743 3s. 10d., Sundries £139 9s. 10d., Balance £209 19s. 7d. (Lincolnshire Archives: Stubbs 1/24/4/1).

Other expenses and the cost of fencing, planting hedges and trees, ditching, putting in gates and making ponds accounted for well over £400, making a total bill by 1829 of £1,544.

But there was another, smaller, farm let to Mr. Robert Misson —about 22 acres. Its share of the enclosure expenses was £90 6s. 4d.

Many more claims for payment for both farms began to crowd in : e.g. one from Joseph Corbett* for £831, for fencing, of which he was paid £240 by the tenant. As it was to turn out this was a stroke of the greatest good luck for him : he had at any rate received some hard cash : for the rest he was to whistle long and fruitlessly. Most of this money to pay for the Enclosure had to be raised in the first place by the tenants by mortgage or note of hand. There is mention in the Accounts of a Mr. Pocklington who had advanced £1,300 to the Daveys at 5%. This is by no means usury but it is amazing how swiftly it works when operating at compound interest. By 1832 the debt was nearly £3,100, and on a debt of this size interest is a weighty matter. By Michaelmas 1830 Pocklington had received £347 1s. 3d. on his £1,300 advance, and on the interest paid to Pocklington there was owed two years later £35 to the man who had lent the money to pay the interest.

To make matters worse rents were not being paid regularly during these years of enclosure. In the Accounts relating to the large farm is the statement for 1833 : ' No rent has been paid since the Inclosure, . . . the representative of the late Tenant detaining the same for advances made by him '. (The period in question was 1827, March to 1833, October). But the purpose of the rents was to provide the Usher's income. No rents might then very well mean no Usher. So money had to be advanced by the Clerk and Treasurer to the Trustees (John Nicholson) to pay the Usher. By 1830 John Nicholson was owed for what he had paid Thomas Watson £328 os. 9d. Two years later (by which time £32 interest was due on this sum) he had lent another £167.

The way additional sums of money had to be found and the speed at which the interest mounted was frightening. It frightened the Trustees : in 1836 they ordered the Clerk to make enquiries whether they could obtain money on mortgage at a lower rate of interest. They had considered selling part of the Ulceby estate but decided not to give up hope of getting their heads above water eventually. Rents were at least being paid again. On Davey's farm the rent had been £70 4s. a year and on Misson's £13 10s. 6d. before the enclosure. The Trustees had proposed to increase the rents from Lady Day 1828 by £80 and £11 9s. 6d. respectively (i.e. roughly 100% increase). But in a statement of the financial position at Michaelmas 1832 the Clerk noted that the advanced rents had not been charged, though the tenants were expecting an advance. He added with a note of foreboding that it was to be feared the tenants would not be able to pay the arrears, especially if the advanced rents were insisted on. The result would be a so much greater burden of debt. His foreboding proved justified : the increased rents due but unpaid amounted in 1832 to £360.

When the Charity Commissioners viewed the position in 1837 they observed that the 1824 Enclosure Act contained no provision concerning such estates as that of the School; and though one section had given the Commissioners power to deduct the expense of enclosure to an amount not exceeding £5 an acre, the debt incurred by the Trustees exceeded £20 an acre. In any case the Award had been signed and finished and the Commissioners had no power to act.

Events rarely move quickly where corporate bodies are concerned : their members meet too irregularly and infrequently ; so the affair dragged on for years. The interest on the debt mounted, but at least some faint streaks of light could now be perceived : rents had at last gone up and were coming in. The only part of the debt on which interest was not growing was poor Corbett's account for fencing—£590 still unpaid. There must have seemed no reason after some years why anything should ever be done. Even when John Nicholson, the Clerk and holder of the debt, died in 1840, the debt went marching on—owed to his widow. It was now merely £2,890 2s. 11d. as a result of the rise in rents. The idea of selling part of Ulceby did present itself in a fleeting fashion to the Trustees in 1843 and 1844 when Corbett began to press for payment, but no action was taken.

About this time a new expense materialised at Ulceby : new buildings were demanded by a new tenant.* Help had to be given him. Incredible as it may seem, by 1853 the debt still lived. Before long Mrs. Nicholson had need of money. She received something from Leadbetter Uppleby.† But she claimed £2,905. By 1855 the claim was reduced to £2,704. Matters now began to approach a solution. The Trustees had really decided on a sale of land out of the proceeds of which they could pay off the debt. The Charity Commissioners examined the Nicholson claim and suggested a further reduction—to £1,964 14s. 11d. And by 1858 the creditors were willing to accept £2,113 12s. 7d. The Charity Commissioners gave their assent.

There was still Corbett's bill for £590. The distracted Corbett was now almost without hope though he still went through the motion every now and then of sending an account rendered. The bills which exist among the Trustees' papers hardly seem to tally but it was not really surprising if his memory failed him after thirty years. What stung him was the suggestion made by the Trustees—thirty years after the work had been done—that his figures were not trustworthy. He was indignant . . . prepared to take his oath in any court in the kingdom that nothing had been charged for that had not been done. He would have been most abominably ashamed of himself for doing such a thing. He admitted under some probing that his prices might appear high, but they had not been too high at the time the work was done : labour was dear, the cost of quick set hedge plants was considerable then ; much ditching had had to be done in the summer of 1825 when the ground was so hard that the earth in the borders would not bed ; some of the quick had had to be replanted and had caused him heavy losses ; all the work had had to be accomplished before it was in a proper state for measuring up for the proprietors to receive their accounts. There had been difficulty in obtaining enough quick : he had had to buy in Norfolk : it had been put on a vessel for Boston, part of the cargo on deck as there was insufficient space in the hold. A violent gale in the night had blown the vessel from its moorings in Lynn harbour : the quick had been saturated with salt water and consequently much of it would not grow and the work had to be done again. Other parcels of quick bought in Hull got heated and didn't grow. So his plaint went on.

He was slightly easier when informed that the sale was under way : the Charity Commissioners had given their approval for the disposal of the 92 acres in the North Field for £4,199*. But even over that there was delay : the purchaser died in the middle of the proceedings. Corbett's state of mind was pitiable ; he pleaded for justice. He didn't want interest: he wanted only his £590. He didn't mind losing £2,000 but he did object to having a few chains of fencing haggled over. He said that a settlement would be a superlative favour. The favour was done him in 1858. If ever a man earned his money he did ; or if his accounts had not been quite above-board he paid heavily.

It seems a sorry story of muddle and delay. But the position was in some respects quite cheerful. From 1858 the rents of the lands that remained were about £130 (as against £94 for the undivided estate in 1825) ; there was invested a sum of £1,636 15s. 7d. which brought in £49 a year dividend ; and there was no debt.

The Usher reaped no benefit from this at first. His salary in 1825 was £85 14s. and it continued at that until 1833 when Nicholson so worried him with talk of debt and fear of wholesale collapse that he agreed to take £60. That was all he received until 1835 ; in that year his salary went up to £80 again. It was still at that figure in 1845 : the rents had gone up but the difference between the rent received and the £80 paid was needed to pay the debt and reduce the interest. Just before the sale the Trustees had considered not selling but borrowing the money at 5% and repaying the whole loan in thirty years out of the rents. They found it would leave the Usher £35 a year. So they sold; and as a result the Usher's salary was up in 1857 to £95, in 1858 to £145 and stood in succeeding years at figures slightly below that. And by 1875 it had reached £180. Unfortunately for the Usher just when it was brightest the job disappeared.

How far had the tragi-comedy of the enclosure been the fault of the Trustees? The gravamen of the charge hinted at by the Charity Commissioners in 1837 seemed to be that the Trustees had allowed the rents to continue at the old levels from 1825 to 1835, so that the School, or rather the Usher, in effect paid for all the improvements and the tenants alone benefited by the enclosure. It is not easy to say how far this charge is justified in the absence of firm facts about leases. There is no mention in the Minutes of any leases for Ulceby. Perhaps there were no leases and the Trustees failed to use that state of things to the advantage of the Usher. But the accounts suggest that leases may have been granted in 1807 and in 1816, which suggests they were for nine years. If the 1816 renewal was for a further period of nine years it should have been possible to alter them in 1825. But it must be remembered that the 1820s were years of commercial and financial crises. After 1821 agriculture had found itself faced with falling prices and it would not have been surprising if the Trustees had decided that it was not a suitable time to press tenants, particularly tenants like those at Ulceby who had for years farmed on heavy clay undrained and therefore not too profitable.

Barrett carried on as Usher until 1878; although the older man he outstayed Cotterill and preserved a link with the past while a new institution was emerging. When he retired he was given a pension of £60. He promptly opened a school in the neighbourhood which seems to have deprived the Grammar School of a few pupils. In 1890 (28th December) he died at his house, 37, Albert Street, Brigg, aged eighty-four.

Samuel Vessey's Report on North Field Farm, 12th January, 1857

The whole farm is arable except for No. 4 : 3 acres 2 roods 28 perches, on which stand the house and farm-buildings. The house is only a cottage ; the buildings are ample for the quantity of land, but are very lightly built. A large portion of the land is strong clay—the greater part of it underdrained. The farm is one and a half miles from Ulceby Station on the Manchester, Sheffield and Lincolnshire Railway.

The Last of the Trustees

BEFORE grammar schools were absorbed in the state system it mattered enormously who their governors were. However well staffed a school might be, unless its governors were interested in it, and, even more important, unless they had knowledge of land and farming, there might soon very easily be no school : its endowment might be misappropriated or lost through mismanagement. Brigg was fortunate in having available the services of several able, public-spirited men of integrity acting as its Trustees.

To a great extent the mixture was as before : Trustees continued to come from the same families and the connections of those families. The reason was that those families were the local land-owning families, the Nelthorpes, the Pelhams of Brocklesby, the Andersons, and they could be relied on to attend meetings and do the necessary work.

After the death of Sir John Nelthorpe in 1799 his son Henry, the seventh baronet, joined the governing body. He had not the ability or the force of character of his father. Nor did he play much part in public affairs. His later years were darkened by domestic difficulties as a result of which he found himself confined to a rather restricted range of friends.²²² What was needed during the first thirty years of the nineteenth century was more drive than he could supply. The former goad of the Trustees, Hesleden, seems to have fallen on evil days in 1821,²²³ and both before then, when he had business worries, and after, in the seven years before he died, he does not seem to have tried to compel any interest in the affairs of the School, Sir Henry Nelthorpe was not the man to combat this inertia,* and the result was that a meeting of Trustees was a rarity for long after 1800. No attempt even was made to see that the number of Trustees was kept up and although suggestions were made for creating new Trustees in 1821, 1824, 1827, and 1828 nothing was completed until 1830 when there were only three surviving Trustees.

Sir Henry Nelthorpe died childless and his nephew (son of John Nelthorpe of South Ferriby) inherited the title. The last baronet was a much more vigorous personality but he did not come of age until 1835 and it was after that that he began to leave his mark on the district. He bought the manor of Twigmoor in 1837 and he shortly opened brickyards both at Twigmoor and at South Ferriby. He bought more land at Scawby* and he began an ambitious tree planting scheme at Scawby — holly, box, yew, poplar, birch, larch, oak, spruce, Spanish chestnut, silver fir, witch elm, mountain ash, beech, elm, sycamore, lime, and Scotch pine. He never seems to have been short of energy — a slight, distinguished looking man according to his nephew's recollection, who shot and rode well.²²⁴ He always had time and energy for meetings of Trustees : over a period of twenty-seven years he missed a mere ten out of fifty-six meetings ; the only other Trustee who had anything like as good a record was his brother-in-law Robert Sutton.†

Robert Sutton married Sir John's sister, Charlotte, in 1847 and when Sir John died in 1865, there being no male relative, she inherited the Scawby and South Ferriby estates. She and her husband lived at Scawby, she till she died in 1872, he till his death in 1885. He was the son of Robert Nassau Sutton, who had been a close acquaintance of Lady Hester Stanhope‡ and the correspondent of the Younger Pitt and of Sir John Moore. It was not until after his father-in-law's death that he became a Trustee but from 1866 up to the introduction of the new scheme for the School in 1878 (when the Trustees ceased to exist) he was a constant attender of meetings and usually took the chair. He was therefore responsible for controlling the fortunes of the School at a critical time.

As in the eighteenth century it was relationship or friendship with the Nelthorpe family which brought some of the Trustees into connection with the School. There can have been nothing other than his close friendship with Sir Henry Nelthorpe (which often brought him to Scawby) that accounts for the appointment of William Jarratt, Mayor of Hull in 1799. (He was of some importance to Hull as the Corporation of Hull leased Jarratt's house in Lowgate in 1805 and used it as Guildhall for over half a century.²²⁵) It was also the Nelthorpe connection which led to the inclusion in the list of Trustees' names of that of Lord William Beauclerk. Beauclerk married first the daughter of the Rev. Robert Carter of Redbourne and Charlotte Nelthorpe. On her death in ‡He accompanied her (c. 1798) on one of her journeys to Constantinople. He also took part in the fighting against the French in Egypt at Aboukir in 1801.

1797 she left the Redbourne estates to her husband. Sir C. H. J. Anderson (who through his Nelthorpe relations could claim to have inside information) maintained that Beauclerk treated her badly and forced her into making the will bequeathing Redbourne to him. 'The lawyer who made the will sometime afterwards cut his throat'.²²⁶ Beauclerk then married the daughter of John Nelthorpe of Little Grimsby, Maria Janetta, in 1799. His brother, the Duke of St. Albans, died in 1815; the following year his nephew died, and Lord William became Duke. Though he did not die until 1824 he never seems to have attended a Trustees' Meeting after achieving the title.* Perhaps it was as well: he sounds somewhat repellent.

The two Andersons who served the School in this century were descended from those who had acted as Trustees from the beginning. They too, however, came into closer contact through the marriage of the Rev. Sir Charles Anderson to Sir Henry Nelthorpe's sister in 1804. Anderson acted as guardian to the youthful Sir John from 1830 to 1835. He was a supporter in the 1830s of Reform in moderation, but opposed the aged Major Cartwright's schemes for adult male suffrage. He wanted an extension of the franchise to all large towns. He also supported the movement for abolition of slavery. As the Vicar of Scawby (he lived at Lea, near Gainsborough, but kept a curate at Scawby) he took an important part in the rebuilding of Scawby Church in 1840. But he had a seizure in 1837 and his health was precarious during the next few years. Up to 1837 however he was a regular supporter of the School.

His son Sir C. H. J. Anderson showed equal keenness in furthering the School's interests whether it was in attending for 'Brigg School Examination' (as he did 21st June, 1844) or keeping an eye on the estates. His contact with the School was kept up till he died in 1891.

At the beginning of the century the Pelham family showed much interest. The first Lord Yarborough till his death in September 1823 made a point when in the district of obeying a summons to a meeting of Trustees. Like Sir Charles Anderson he was regarded as a supporter of Reform. So was his son who, as the Hon. C. A. Pelham, was a Trustee at the same time as his father. In April 1823 he presented a Lincolnshire petition in the House of

*His son, the ninth Duke, would have added colour to the sober Trustees' meetings. He married an actress who had already made her fortune by first marrying the banker Coutts. With her money St. Albans was able to make a striking show at Redbourne. In 1829 he asked Mr. Harrison, clergyman at Redbourne to have two petitions prepared, one for and one against Catholic Emancipation so that none of his tenants might be forced to sign against their conscience. (Stamford Mercury, 20th March, 1829). Unfortunately he never attended a meeting of the Brigg Trustees, although he was on the panel.

Commons* for Parliamentary Reform and in 1837 presented in the Lords a Lincolnshire petition in favour of voting by ballot. The Complete Peerage (VIII, 1898) spoke of him as 'an ardent Whig,' but he opposed the Liberals over Free Trade. He spent a good deal of time at sea in his yacht 'Falcon' and it is perhaps surprising that he was able to attend twelve out of a possible twenty-six meetings of Trustees.

In spite of excitements like the Legsby boys' case the principal task of the Trustees was to watch over the land belonging to the School. It was not an easy assignment: the two principal estates were wide apart at Ulceby and at Fulsby; in addition there were detached plots at Horncastle, West Ashby, and Gainsborough.

We have already seen what an anxiety the Ulceby land had been. Even when the Enclosure was over and paid for there were difficulties to be faced. On the remaining property there the house was only a 'stud and mud' building, i.e. a wooden framework with the interstices packed with clay; and it was built on brick foundations. The ends of several of the upright timbers had rotted off at the bottom and thus there had come settlement and bulging of the main walls. The thatched roof was not in too good a condition. The two chimney-heads needed to be pulled down from top to roof and rebuilt. In the 'servant's lodging-room' (a room 16 feet by 18 feet 6 inches) the floor-boards—only half an inch thick—were dilapidated. The out-buildings too were in a state of disrepair.²²⁷ All this led to the expenditure of £250 on a new house on a new site.† Some of the proceeds of the 1857 sale (since invested in Consols) had to be realised, but the Charity Commissioners insisted on the whole sum being replaced by twenty-one annual instalments out of the Usher's income.²²⁸

Apart from the buildings the farm was in fairly good condition as Brady Nicholson's report of 1857 showed, though the greater part of the arable land required under-draining. And Nicholson advised that the tenants should be bound by a four-course system with no more than half the arable land in corn in one year, and no two successive white crops. This kind of problem was typical of those the Trustees were constantly confronted by.

Fulsby was not only some distance from Brigg and Ulceby: it was somewhat isolated even in its own area, until the cutting of the Horncastle and Lincoln Navigation in the 1790s. The diary of John Cragg of Threckingham²²⁹ says of Fulsby that in 1799 it was 'only a single house by the Bain side'. (In 1865 a report on the School's lands said that the Fulsby property comprised the whole hamlet.)

At the beginning of 1788 John Mitchell was the tenant of all the School's land in Fulsby, West Ashby and Horncastle but in February of that year²³⁰ it was divided, Philip Copping of Baumber taking the Mill House and land adjoining it, while John Small of Mareham-le-Fen leased all the rest. The Mill House was then evidently in a poor state of repair since Copping was allowed £20 out of his first year's rent of £27 towards repairing it. Neither he nor his successor Thomas Copping had carried out any satisfactory improvement by the end of 1801 and the Trustees tried to eject Thos. Copping. He, however, stood by the terms of his lease though he promised to rebuild the mill²³¹ provided he could have some assurance that his lease would be renewed (i.e. 1809). The Trustees refused to put anything in writing on this occasion but told Copping that he must use his own discretion, and trust to their fairness.

He must have done so without having cause to regret it : he was still the tenant in 1834 and Mrs. Copping's name as tenant appears in the particulars prepared for the Charity Commissioners in March, 1836. And the report on a valuation of the Fulsby, West Ashby, and Horncastle properties made* in May 1841 states that the mill had been built about forty years before.

The report gives some idea of the nature of the property in this part of the county. It shows that the property in Horncastle consisted of four brick and tiled houses ' with offices ' and gardens. They had been built about thirty years earlier by Henry Boulton and were let by him to Robert Boulton who sublet them to four tenants at £4 14s. 6d. a year each. There were two other tenants in Horncastle paying three guineas each. Nearly a mile east of the town were two pieces of pasture-land occupied by Richard Babington as under-tenant to John Bailey. They amounted in area to three acres. Adjoining the river and just outside the town Anderson Crowder had an acre of garden and there was an allotment at Havenbank, near Langrick Ferry,† of three and three quarter acres occupied by John Bailey.

In West Ashby the only building was a ' mud and thatched tenement ' with a good garden (a little over a quarter of an acre).‡ Then there were two pieces of land, a meadow of just over five acres about three-quarters of a mile from Horncastle and an allotment in Ashby Fen (and fourteen or fifteen miles from West Ashby) of four and a half acres. Both were let to John Bailey but the first he underlet to ' the Rev. Mr. Pearce '. (The report condemned the sub-letting as ' an improper traffic '.)

In Fulsby itself there were still two farms. The smaller was the one which went with the mill (to which was now attached a public house, called at this time the ' Waterman '. Later (1865) its name was given as the ' Jolly Sailor '). The mill was brick and tiled. The inn was partly of brick, mud, tile, and thatch. New buildings had been put up by the tenant (William Thacker) to serve it. The ' farm ' had five fields, the mill yard (about one and a half acres), and a smallish garden ; the whole farm did not amount to much more than twenty-six acres, half arable and half pasture. The bigger farm was occupied by the man who also held some of the Horncastle and West Ashby property, John Bailey. About eighty-eight acres of the total one hundred and thirty-nine were arable.

Beaumont considered the Fulsby, West Ashby, and Horncastle properties were in general let at much less than their proper value, which he estimated at nearly £350 a year. But within a few years there were demands for a reduction of rents (though not from the farmers). In 1851 Boulton was complaining of his losses owing to the number of small unoccupied houses.* Three years later Mrs. Thacker spoke of worsening trade at the inn : the ' return of the house ' for licensing purposes was unlikely to be more than £20.

There were other problems, too. The cottage in West Ashby had by 1858, it was reported by Mr. George Griffin, fallen into a most dilapidated state, and was not worth repairing. It could be made just habitable for £20. But it seemed nothing could make it comfortable, the rooms being so low that a person of normal height could not stand up in them. The previous year heavy rains had almost washed the cottage away and it was now in a very dangerous condition. Something was done to make it a little more habitable and its occupier William Camplin managed somehow to survive it for another eight or nine years. It can only have been because he was ' a careful and industrious person ' (in the words of the Rev. W. M. Pearce whose parish clerk he was). He was paying £3 10s. od. a year for it, but Samuel Vessey (of Halton Manor, Spilsby) in a report on the School property in 1865 suggested that the rent should be increased to £4 4s. od. ; and yet, the following year, his surveyor, R. S. Booth, valued the house at only £50.

The problem partly resolved itself in 1867 when, the Minutes record (20th March), the cottage fell down. Camplin was unwilling to go on paying the same rent for the garden alone and the Trustees decided to sell. At the same time the house property in Horncastle was offered for sale. This consisted of four detached houses in Waring Row containing each one room, a kitchen and two chambers, and two houses in Cagthorpe Lane, each with one living room, a pantry and a chamber. The Horncastle buildings were valued by R. S. Booth in 1866 at £170. When they were put up to auction in 1867 they fetched £370.

*Over a quarter of a century later Cave and Budibent (in their Report, 1878, on the School properties) spoke of ' cottages and warehouses of which there are too many in Horncastle '.

Camplin's garden realised £90. So when Vessey's charges of £44 10s. 1d. had been paid the Trustees had £414 18s. 9d. which were invested in Consols. Undeniably a good stroke of business had been done : the Trustees (or rather the Master) now received £13 7s. 8d. a year instead of £10 18s. 11d., and they had rid themselves of a most embarrassing property.

The Fulsby farms were a different matter since farming was booming in the period from 1845 to 1870 but the Trustees could never sit back and merely collect the rents. That Fulsby was of some value was shown by the desire in the 1860s of Sir Joseph Hawley who now had the Banks estate at Revesby and Tumbly to exchange one of his farms for either all or part of the Fulsby estate. He was willing to take Samuel Vessey's valuation of the estate and pay that with another £500 should the Trustees so desire. They were tempted : they knew that several hundred pounds needed to be spent on the Fulsby buildings which were said to be in a wretched state, but Hales Tooke who went to view the properties, reported that Hawley's farm was ' a terrible out-of-the-way place ' in the Wildmore Fen ; and Sir John Nelthorpe feared some catch : he thought the Hawley proposals ' rather a puzzler '.²³² So nothing came of it until 1879.

Another difficulty, small but irritating, concerned the shooting on Clay's farm. For a long time the Trustees had allowed Sir Joseph Hawley and Mr. Banks Stanhope the right to shoot over the land as it was contiguous to their estates. In 1874 either John Clay decided he wanted the shooting for himself or he resented having his neighbours walking over his land. Sir Henry Hawley — through his agent — peppered away at the Trustees over this for some years. Mrs. Clay (her husband had died in 1876) let ' all sorts come ' and they shot right up to Hawley's garden — an ' intolerable nuisance ' ; Mrs. Clay would not listen to reason : if the crops failed it would probably be her fault ; in its present state the land produced only twitch, voles and moles ; and so on ; splenetic bursts which may have amused the Trustees but certainly caused their Clerk worry and loss of time.

The bigger of the two Fulsby farms (Fulsby Hall) prospered but the tenant, John Clay, suffered a blow in November 1864 when his house was burned to the ground. He wrote to the Trustees (1st November) that it was accidental, the result of a servant girl's taking a candle upstairs to make the servant man's bed. Clay and his wife had had a narrow escape and lost all their clothing except for what they stood up in. They were dependent at first for shelter on their neighbour (on the smaller Fulsby farm) Mrs. Thacker ; but a short time after the fire Mrs. Thacker's man-servant contracted small-pox and she was then unable to help them. They were two miles from ' the village ' and having nowhere for their servants had had to part with them.

And since they had nowhere to keep the cows through the winter they would have to sell them.

The Trustees with moderate speed* — slow for an individual but quick enough for a corporate body — got permission to mortgage the farm in order to build a new farmhouse. This was done in 1865 for £260 (the loan was to be repaid at not more than 5% interest over a period of twenty years). The house built was of brick and slate and contained two front rooms, a kitchen, back kitchen, and five bed-rooms. And by the end of 1869 new farm buildings had been put up — stables, 'wagon hovel', 'calf hovel', and 'bullock hovel' at a cost of £126 7s. 4d.

The smaller farm (held by Mrs. Thacker but mainly in the hands of her son-in-law Robert Pindar) also gave cause for concern. The land, in Pindar's hands, was well farmed;²³³ the drainage and management were good, and though the part near the hill top was liable to suffer from drought in a hot summer the land was worth £30 an acre. The farmhouse and buildings were in good repair. It was the mill which caused trouble. When Copping had rebuilt it just after the turn of the century he had done it badly: three sides of the building were only nine inches thick, and the other by the mill race, though fourteen inches, was considerably undermined owing to the bad construction of the wheel; and in consequence the mill was listing over. In addition the roof was rotten; with a cross prop it might stand for a long time, unless a serious storm occurred. And finally the wooden waterwheel was almost useless and was liable to go to pieces at any time.

After a request for a new wheel (January, 1874) the Trustees asked C. L. Hett, the Brigg engineer, to tender for supplying a new wheel. Hett proposed an iron wheel at a cost of £135. This was more than the School could afford and a wooden wheel was put in costing £75. It did not satisfy Pindar. He waited until the end of July 1874 to get 'a full pond of water' to try out the wheel and then reported lugubriously that it took 'a good deal of water' to drive it, far more than he expected for one pair of stones. Even the single pair could not be turned fast enough: it took nearly two hours to grind a quarter of barley to fine meal. It was incorrectly designed, the buckets not being the right shape. But in spite of his complaints Pindar continued to rent the land, and even asked for a long lease.

It would be easy to accuse the Trustees of having failed to make the most of the School lands. When H. M. Cave and J. M. Budibent reported on the condition of the estates (12th August, 1878) they hinted at mismanagement. The field of pasture in West Ashby, they said, was good land ruined by having been consistently mown, the hay being removed, while no manure was ever returned to the land. None of the Fen land was properly farmed ; some, indeed, was in a most disgraceful state : on the West Revesby allotment manure had for two years been allowed to accumulate in the yard ; most of the produce from the Fen lands was led to Fulsby and consumed on the premises, and little manure was applied. The Fulsby land was neglected, some of the outbuildings being beyond repair, the gates and posts all bad. Pindar was an active, industrious man. But he required better buildings for the stock he kept, and a warehouse needed to be added to the mill. Much of this criticism could have been forestalled had an annual inspection of the lands been made and a field book kept, showing the crop growing in each field and the state of the field's cultivation.

This was true enough but the Trustees were hardly in a position to carry out such regular inspection themselves and professional assistance would have been expensive.

In one respect the Trustees had failed egregiously, but it must be remembered it was at a bad time — the early years of the century — and it was at least as much the fault of the Clerk as of the Trustees. They forgot completely for several years that they owned any property at Gainsborough. As the property was for the paying of the expenses of administration the offence was not perhaps rank, but it is disturbing to read a note in the Accounts (for 1824) running : ' It appearing from the Books and papers that there was an Estate at Gainsborough belonging to the Trust of which no Rent had been received of [sic] several years it was at length discovered that the Tenant was a Mr. Thomas of Hull '. Mr. Thomas paid up £105 in November, 1827, covering the missing years.

There is no doubt that in the eighteenth century the Trustees fell far short of their duty : apart from the fact that they failed to carry out the intentions of the 1669 Will in respect of the tithes of Barrow, Market Rasen, and Legsby, they neglected the School. None of the inspections of scholars enjoined upon them seem to have been carried out until the 1840s. Their meetings were far too infrequent and spasmodic until the 1830s ; and even then there were years when they omitted to meet at all, e.g. 1836, 1839, 1840, 1852, 1860, 1873. The greatest number of times they met in any one year was seven — in 1856. The average number was slightly over two. It is true that the founder's will required them to act only twice a year ; but a minute was required in 1808 to remind the Trustees of that minimum. The attendance at the meetings was usually small. There were twelve present at one meeting towards the end of the eighteenth century but a commoner number was three, four, or five, then and in the next century. Until November, 1847 it does not seem to have occurred to them that the accounts needed auditing ; and it took a fire at Fulsby to show them the value of insurance.

Their greatest neglect was in not concerning themselves sufficiently with the way the Master and the Usher ran the School. The view they took was that once these two were appointed they should be given a free hand. Considering the care they took to select good men one may applaud their decision ; but their refusal to obey Sir John Nelthorpe's order to eject the Master when he reached the age of forty-five led too often to slackness and deterioration.

It is easy to condemn the Trustees' easy-going ways from the standpoint of the present, but it should be remembered in their favour that they conscientiously strove within their limitations to do their best. They kept the School in good physical shape, and, the unfortunate exception of the Ulceby estate apart, they looked after the endowment well, handing on to their successors of 1878 a heritage at least as valuable as what they had received.

New Schemes and a New Age

ALTHOUGH Cotterill had resigned in October 1876 there was nothing yet settled as to the future of the foundation. Till all was decided the School had to be continued on a provisional basis. A temporary Head Master was appointed (9th October, 1876) — H. E. Philcox, B.A., Oxford, of Lewes, a young married man who undertook to teach the upper part of the School at a salary of £3 a week with an allowance of ten shillings a week for lodgings.* Barrett agreed to carry on as before ; he also took over the Head Master's garden for one year.

Philcox pleased the people of Brigg no more than Cotterill had. Police-Superintendent Danby attended a Trustees' Meeting (October, 1877) to complain of his son's dismissal from the School and also of the charges Philcox made for maps and ink. Mr. Serjeant Jackson too objected to such charges and to the way the temporary Head 'taunted' the pupils. The Trustees smoothed things over but it was plain that Philcox would not remain. Barrett, of course carried on to the end of the old system. One other person who carried on was Mrs. Carr. For nearly three quarters of a century she was said to have been responsible for the cleaning of the School.²³⁵ She died in March 1878 at the age of 90. She had known both Walters and seen Cotterill come and go.

Meanwhile there was much discussion over what form the new School was to take. The old Trustees (particularly Sir Charles Anderson and the Rev. Robert Sutton) were anxious that there should be a clause requiring the Head Master to be a member of the Church of England. Such it was maintained had indubitably been the Founder's intention. The inhabitants of Brigg demanded that Greek should be taught : it was pointed out that Brigg was an important place with a weekly market second in the county only to Lincoln's, and that it and its district contained a large number of gentlemen, clergymen, medical men, merchants, and farmers — an exceptionally wealthy class. Another point in dispute was whether any of the endowment should be used for the education of girls. Again, should the Governors of the new School include local tradesmen ? From the beginning, it was urged, the Trustees had been always drawn from the nobility and gentry. Every point raised was doubtless considered by the Charity Commission and they then issued the approved scheme in April 1877 ; it was submitted to the Committee of Council on Education* and finally approved in October.

The scheme set up a Governing Body of eleven ; there was an ex-officio Governor who was to be the lord of the manor of Scawby (or his nominee); six of the Governors were termed ' representative ' : they were elected, two by the Brigg Local Board, two by the Poor Law Board, and two by the Petty Sessional magistrates; and six Co-optative Governors were named in the scheme, to act for life. There were to be only four Co-optative Governors after the death of the six named, and they were to be elected by the general body of Governors, each for eight years. The first six Co-optative Governors were the Rev. Robert Sutton, Sir Charles Henry John Anderson, Sir John Dugdale Astley of Elsham, M.P., Sir Robert Sheffield of Normanby, the Rev. Thomas Booth Wright, Rector of Broughton, and George Augustus Luard of Blyborough. All had been Trustees of the old Foundation. Governors' meetings were to be held at least twice a year and five Governors were required to make a quorum. They must keep minutes and publish annual accounts.

But the property of the Foundation was to be vested in the Official Trustee of Charity Lands and the Official Trustees of Charitable Funds, in trust for the Foundation.

School buildings were to be provided for eighty scholars and twenty boarders and a Head Master. The latter must be a graduate of a United Kingdom university, appointed after public notice had been given by the Governors, and dismissible by them at six months' notice. He must live in the house provided for him. While he was Head Master he might not accept ' any benefice having care of souls '.

The Headmaster received the sole right of appointing and dismissing Assistant Masters and he was responsible for deciding the curriculum and the maintenance of discipline. For his work he was to be paid £120 a year together with a capitation payment (to be decided by the Governors) of not less than £2 and not more than £4 a year for each boy at the School. He was also entitled to boarding fees though these must not exceed £40 a year. The Assistant Master's remuneration was decided by the Head Master with the Governors' approval.

No boy under seven must be admitted ; nor was he to remain after the age of seventeen. Every applicant for admission was to be examined by the Head Master and then when accepted he must pay not less than £6 and not more than £10 a year for tuition.

*There was no Board of Education till 1899.

BRIGG GRAMMAR SCHOOL

Instruction included Latin, French and German, but not Greek, except as an extra to be charged for at the rate of not less than £3 a year. Each year the scholars must be examined by an examiner appointed by the Governors, and each year the Head Master must report in writing to the Governors.

Foundation Scholarships were provided : ten of these gave free tuition, but half of them were to be competed for only by boys who had had at least three years at a public elementary school in Brigg, Wrawby, Messingham, N. Kelsey, Legsby, Ulceby, Fulsby, West Ashby, Scawby, Castlethorpe, or Broughton. In addition there were to be two boarding scholarships for the yearly value of £40 to be competed for in the first place by boys from Legsby and Fulsby ; but if no suitable candidates presented themselves the scholarships might be given to boys already at the School. Another sop was thrown to the Fulsby and Legsby inhabitants (who still felt that less than justice was being done to them): four other scholarships worth £5 each were to be given to boys in these villages, tenable at a public elementary school.

A special provision was included concerning the education of girls. As soon as the pensions of Cotterill and Barrett ceased, the Governors were required to apply £100 a year for the ' advancement of the education of girls ' in Brigg, Wrawby, Messingham and so on. What was in the mind of the Committee was scholarships to enable girls to go on from an elementary to a higher school.

The scheme does not strike one as revolutionary or even very imaginative. The first Sir John Nelthorpe might have nodded in approval except for what he would have thought the reactionary bits about demanding fees from local boys.* The masters would be worse off than under the old scheme (the second master very much so) but the boys would pay more, while it is questionable if they would receive very much more. The governing body was to have a more democratic tinge (in keeping with the times), but there was a powerful leavening of the old order there. Still, some change had to be made : there was a new feeling in the air which had to be taken account of — and of which one expression had already emerged in the 1870 Education Act — a vigorous, vocal Radicalism. It wanted to provide schools for the people ; not just primary schools but places of learning which would lead through the universities to equality of opportunity to all. The 1878 scheme at Brigg represents the first timid groping for a way to such an end. But inevitably it was a compromise : it involved property, with which to deal violently would set too many people by the ears.

*The Local Board at its monthly meeting in March, 1883 expressed the opinion that the fees at Brigg Grammar School were too high and should be reduced from £8 to £6. (Stamford Mercury).

NEW SCHEMES AND A NEW AGE

The Master's house, mid-nineteenth century : a plan suggested by an old photograph and by builder's estimates for construction and repairs.

The Legsby provisions were derisory. It was not to be expected that many boys would be able to take advantage of them ; in fact few did. And the direction that £100 should be used annually for educating girls was never properly obeyed. It must be admitted there was a good reason for it since the scheme came into operation at an exceptionally difficult time for endowments drawn from land. From 1878 agriculture became more and more depressed right up to the end of the century. The only response the Governors could make (when both Cotterill and Barrett were dead) in view of the continual requests from their tenants for a reduction of rent* was to beg to be excused, pleading poverty. From 1881 to 1899 they successfully petitioned to be allowed to put the £100 in question to general purposes, and when in 1899 they gave way to the demand† for the admission of girls it was only in the last despairing effort to keep the School going at all.

How successful the remainder of the scheme was will be considered in a moment.

The first thing the new Governors had to do was to put up new buildings. They obtained a report from James Fowler of Louth on those which were standing. He thought the fabric of the original School was 'a very interesting style of work' but he had no opinion at all of the additions which had been made on the north side at the beginning of the nineteenth century : they were of 'a very questionable and incogruous character'. Goddard and Sons of Lincoln also made an examination and a report. It was clear that their opinion coincided with that of Fowler. They recommended that the northerly accretions should be swept away (the materials being, they implied, fitly used for such things as latrines and boundary walls. But the Schoolroom was capable of satisfactory adaptation as a classroom (62 feet long and 18 feet wide and 17 feet high) with an entrance at the west end ; and two classrooms (each 18 feet x 16 feet) could be provided on the north side (in place that is of the original dwelling houses). They had in mind a sitting room and private entrance for the Headmaster also at the east end. The building would need re-tiling ; the outer walls would have to be thoroughly restored and interior walls replastered ; and the ground floor of all the rooms needed to be raised eighteen inches above the existing level, those of the schoolrooms, classrooms and Master's sitting room being laid with boards, while the boys' entrance and lavatory should be paved with

*In 1883 Robert Pindar wrote from Fulsby that he had sold only £20 worth of produce from his land during the year. Next year both Pindar and the other Fulsby tenant Mrs. Richardson said they had never had so bad a year. And so it went on year after year.

†In 1898 the villages entitled under the 1878 scheme to benefit from the giving of scholarships to girls all said they wanted the provision to be applied, except Kirmingham; Elsham and Kirton-Lindsey seemed doubtful.

bricks or stone. Goddard oddly proposed as well to put a bell tower over the entrance, a suggestion which was not accepted.

In the main however this was the scheme which was adopted, the Governors merely making one or two changes, the most important of which were the removal of the dormer windows and the very ugly chimney at the east end fronting on Grammar School Road (still often spoken of then as School-house Lane).^{*} The main concern was to ensure that the education of sixty boys should suffer as little interruption as possible. Once the School had been put into order there would be time to consider the Headmaster's house.

Perhaps it was because James Fowler in his scheme proposed to deal with the erection of the School and the house as one operation that the Governors turned from him to Goddard. It suited them better financially that the School should first be completed and the problem of the Master's house left to a later date. So the house was built where it is now as Goddard recommended. Fowler had suggested that it should be on the north side of the School (between that is, the main School building of to-day and the new Swimming Bath), and connected with a small room in the north-east corner of the main building by a short cloister, in the rear of which might be the lavatories for the boarders. If this were done the first floor rooms over the north side of the School could be used as dormitories for twenty boarders. The adoption of this plan would certainly have meant that the Headmaster's new house need not be so large, but the Governors turned it down.

The contractor for the building of both School and house was Joseph Parker of Brigg; his tender was £977 for the School and £2,344 for the house.[†] He started the alterations to the School in June, 1878.

The Governors could not pay these sums without realising capital. It was decided to sell the Gainsborough, Horncastle, West Ashby, and Fen allotments. The Gainsborough land, a garden of about an acre with a frontage of two hundred and forty feet on the river and suitable for building, and a meadow about three acres, was sold for £565. The other land put up to auction in Horncastle did not all find buyers but what was sold brought in £1,250; the other land, the ten allotments, were rented out on lease. The Governors also sold to Hawley 27 acres 3 roods 26 perches at Fulsby:

^{*}Another thing which the Governors were directly responsible was the marking out of the limits of the 'playground' and erection of the brick wall ten feet high on the north side.

[†]The total expenditure on buildings under the 1877 Scheme was £4,389 10s. 2d. (£1,640 16s. 0d. on the Schoolroom, £2,582 3s. 10d. on the Headmaster's house, and £160 12s. 2d. on architects' fees). (Ministry of Education, Legal Branch, EE45656, New No. 5252, Durnford's Report).

The price was £2,000 which the Governors considered a good one. It probably was, but it involved an unexpected expense, that of providing new farm buildings for the remainder of the holding, the character of which had been altered by the sale. Over £200 was spent on buildings at Fulsby in 1882, and it is not surprising that within a few years the Governors were contemplating a further sale—again to Hawley. This time they sold (1888) 49 acres 3 roods 4 perches :

Again the price was £2,000. The Fulsby Hall Farm was thus drastically reduced in size.

Once the Governors had put the building in hand they turned to the appointment of a Headmaster. On the 13th May, 1878, J. E. Williams, a master at Bedford Grammar School, was appointed. Six weeks later he resigned on the grounds of ill-health and inability to fulfil the duties of the office. No sooner had he done this than he changed his mind, but the Governors agreed unanimously on 6th July, that they would not consider him as Headmaster. Next they appointed the Rev. J. W. Burrow, Senior Master at Loretto (15th July). A week later the Clerk (Thomas Freer) was writing ironically to Williams, ' You will be surprised to hear he [Burrow] has expressed his desire to decline the appointment ! ' The Governors tried again : they appointed Richmond Flowers of Lincoln College, Oxford. He was Senior Assistant Classical Master at Newark Grammar School, a young man of twenty-eight and unmarried. He had a local connection : his father had been till his death in 1875 Vicar of Ulceby (closely connected with the Field family which owned much of Ulceby) and thus there already existed a slender tie between him and the School, through the Ulceby farm belonging to the School.

It was he who re-opened the School in the January of 1879 ; his prospectus stated that the boarding house was not yet erected but was expected to be finished in the ' course of the next year '. The prospectus announced that there would be five weeks' holiday at Christmas, two at Easter, and three at Midsummer, which sounds rather as though he was adhering to the old-fashioned division of the year in which the summer holiday began about 21st June and went on until about 10th August. Both Cotterill and Philcox had kept to that system.

He showed himself vigorous when the School started in 1879. In March he had persuaded the Governors to allow the field to be prepared for cricket : they agreed to allow the cricket-ground to be relaid under the supervision of Captain Sutton* and Mr. Cave (the agent for the Elwes estates). He also persuaded the Governors to plant trees round the School field. In his Report for 1884 he referred to the cottages which had recently been built on the north side of the field (i.e. along Glebe Road). It had, he said, been suggested to him by Mr. C. Cotterill (son of the Rev. Charles Cotterill and a master at Fettes) that unless some quick-growing trees were planted to screen the field from the cottages parents might be deterred from sending their boys to the School. Flowers urged that some of the beech trees in his garden should be transplanted on the field and interspersed with some quick growers. Flowers also obtained money for prizes. And he got the Governors to agree that there ought to be a swimming bath built on the School field. It was years before his dream of a School swimming bath was to be realised. He also got an assistant master — F. H. Weston, B.A. Cambridge, at £120 a year. Weston did not stay long. The Stamford Mercury (13th August 1880) described a presentation to him by the boys of 'an elegant bible and prayer book' on the occasion of his departure for a curacy at All Saints, Margaret Street, Hull.

The shrubbery by the drive was also laid out and by 1893 the shrubs and trees were already well-grown.

The Minutes, like the Law, do not concern themselves with small matters and they make no mention of Weston and his successor, though he was probably C. H. Maggs, B.A. But one of the assistants Flowers gathered for a short time was Hensley Henson, later Bishop of Durham. In his Retrospect of an Unimportant Life, 1950 (p. 358) Henson described how after running away from school at Broadstairs he thought he might try a little teaching and he drifted to Brigg at the age of eighteen or twenty. He liked Flowers who, finding that his young assistant was anxious to be ordained urged him to go to Oxford and helped him in a number of ways. Henson regarded Brigg Grammar School with some indulgence — a 'fair specimen' of the old type of grammar school, its discipline good, its teaching sound, the general tone healthy, and the boys likeable. The only thing in fact that he disliked at Brigg was the 'Ritualism' he found at the Parish Church, and even that was offset for him by the strong congregational atmosphere of the services.

Another assistant master in 1884 was the Rev. W. P. Mayor²³⁶ who became curate of the Brigg Parish Church and later Vicar of St. John's, Darlington. In 1885 the Second Master was Oldroyd.²³⁷ It seems likely that C. W. Cray (for fifty years organist at the Church) was even then teaching music at the School.* In 1887 Lloyd was assistant, and in 1889 McMurray and Davies were both on the staff. Two years later it was E. C. Freeman who was referred to in a local paper as Second Master. He drew undesirable notice to the School as he was reported to have been running about without coat or hat and behaving in an extraordinary manner. He was taken to his rooms and medical advice was sought; but during the evening his 'insanity assumed a violent form and he had to be placed under restraint and watched'.

The article by David Briggs in the Briggensian already referred to states that in the 1880s another assistant master was called 'Bothshauser';† he made himself unpopular by introducing 'cubes' as a form of punishment. Younger boys were usually given two digits, elder boys three or four; the number thus formed had to be cubed, the working being shown in full and repeated from ten to fifty times. It is likely, however, that the boys' lack of affection for this master lay rather in his foreign origin and his lack of interest in games.

In the 1890s W. H. Counsell, B.A., Cambridge, and G. G. Cross were on the Staff; but little can be said about other assistants: either they were engaged by the Head Master without reference to the Governors or the Clerk to the Governors declined to clutter up his Minutes with an account of the constant ebb and flow of assistant staff.

There seems to have been no shortage of activities in the early years after the re-opening of the School. In July, 1880, a letter was sent to the Governors:

'Gentlemen,

It is the wish of the B.G.S. Cricket Club to ask you to request Mr. Flowers to grant a whole holiday on Friday next, July 23rd; we wish to play you a friendly match at Cricket in the afternoon; we shall allow you to have Mr. Flowers‡ and Mr.

†His actual name was Boltshauser.

‡Flowers was a keen cricketer: in 1892 he was presented by the Brigg Cricket Club with a bat as the player with the best batting average. And he was a wicket keeper of more than average ability. He was also a man who liked a day's hunting. Old Boys speak of his appearing in School on Saturday morning dressed for the hunt.

‘ We remain,

Yours truly,

‘ All the School ’.

At Christmas there was always a concert or entertainment. The Stamford Mercury reports one in December, 1881, consisting of vocal and instrumental music and tableaux vivants; the schoolroom was filled with a large and fashionable audience. Masters, boys, the Vicar, his sister, Flowers’ sister, and others, took part. Three years later the concert included a short play acted by masters and boys;* and a similar entertainment took place in 1886. By 1891 the concert is called the ‘ Annual Dulce Domum ’.

Sports were held in the Easter Term and included a short ‘ steeplechase ’ which started in the School field, continued through the orchard and garden of ‘ Thornholme ’ on Wrawby Road, over what is now the High School field, and back along the dyke and fence at the end of the School field.

The scholastic results were considered highly satisfactory during these years. The annual examinations arranged by the Governors led to pleasing reports. The first (December, 1879) by Harry Johnson, B.A. pointed out that when Flowers took over he began ‘ literally ab ovo ’: no boy knew a word of Latin or French; but their progress had been marked. The next examiner’s report (by J. E. Julian, B.A.) said the high standard was surprising and gave evidence of careful and thorough teaching. At the same time he drew attention to an absence of the kind of general knowledge that ‘ comes from contact with well-informed persons ’, but that was a drawback inevitably associated with this type of school. The third report shows that Xenophon’s Anabasis, Æneid and Cæsar were being read; it states that the French translation was ‘ clear and spirited ’, but the Upper School’s History was better than its Geography.

But after about fifteen years the School was not so happy. Numbers were falling. The year 1886 had been a poor year: there had been only twenty-seven boys in the School, a mere three of them boarders,† but there was an upsurge during the next few years. It is after 1897 that the decline became most marked, the numbers dropping in that year from forty-three to thirty-six, and during the next two years they came down to thirty-one. Flowers began to complain of what had so worried Cotterill and Barrett — irregular attendance.

*The boys were Taylor, Sissons, Grant, Hill, Tritton, Smith, E. Symonds, T. Fryer, Goldsmith, B. Symonds, Chatterton, and C. Symonds.

†There had been seventeen boarders in 1889—so many that it had been necessary to build in 1890 a Sanatorium (now used as the Refectory or Canteen). There is some uncertainty as to the numbers in the Boarding house in 1886. The numbers stated above were given by Flowers in one of his Annual Reports. But Durnford (Ministry of Education, Legal Branch EE 45656 New No. 5252) asserts that there were five boarders in 1886.

The Governors were seriously worried by the evidence of decline. Through their Clerk they got into touch with the Charity Commission in February 1886 and as a result Mr. Durnford was sent down to meet the Governors and then write a report. This report²³⁸ (5th April, 1886) stated the position concisely and analysed the causes of the trouble. The estimated income in 1886 was £373 15s. od., after a deduction of 10% on the rents of Jane Richardson and Robert Pindar; the expenses were £610 8s. 1d.; tuition fees were expected to bring in only £192, leaving a situation, the awkwardness of which would have been immediately recognized by Wilkins Micawber.

The chairman of the Governors and Mr. Budibent (states Durnford) had made a careful inspection of the School's property and found ample cause for anxiety at Fulsby where the farm was in 'starvation condition': there was little stock on the farm and no artificial manure was applied. But to give the tenant notice and put the farm in the market would entail a loss of £50 a year on the rental.

Barrett's pension came in for criticism because the former Usher (now in his eightieth year) was running 'a private adventure School' in Brigg, attended by twelve to fourteen boys. The instruction given them was only just above that of the ordinary elementary school but sufficient to draw away boys who would otherwise have gone to the Grammar School. It seemed unfair that Barrett should thus damage the School while receiving a pension from it. There appeared however to be no remedy.

More had been spent on building under the new Scheme than was, perhaps, justifiable. Of the two classrooms added in the old building only one was being used. Altogether the building was capable of accommodating considerably more boys than the hundred contemplated by the Scheme. The Head Master's house was an 'imposing building' with a first floor dormitory said to be for ten boys but capable of taking fifteen, and another on the second floor of equal size. The house contained more ornament than was necessary, both in the external features of the architecture and in the internal fittings. For example there was a spacious entrance hall floored with encaustic tiles of elaborate pattern. The Head Master himself had expressed regret that the money spent on 'these luxuries' had not been saved.

Of the twenty-seven boys in the School only one came from outside the county (from Doncaster). The day boys were nearly all from Brigg, the few who came from the country round walking or riding in on horse-back. When the alterations and additions had been made in 1878 it had been hoped that many boys would be attracted from Frodingham (then beginning to develop) as weekly boarders, but this expectation had been disappointed.

There was no doubt that the agricultural depression had hit the School hard, and many parents who would formerly have sent their sons to a 'Middle' school were now content with an elementary school. The Vicar of Brigg (the Rev. P. H. Brierley) had mentioned several middle-class parents in Brigg who, to his surprise, used the National School for their children. One of the Governors was sending his son to the village school at Scawby. Flowers had said that whereas ten years earlier a meet of Lord Yarborough's hounds would ordinarily be attended by a hundred horsemen of whom two-thirds would be tenant farmers, now the average field was twenty, with scarcely a farmer among them. In these hard times farmers sent their sons either to the village school or to the cheapest boarding school in the district.

There was competition from the Grammar Schools at Gainsborough and Caistor, particularly from the latter, where the low boarding fees of £20 charged by Mr. Thomas caused his boarding house to be filled. Flowers complained that he could not possibly charge such low fees without entirely altering the standard of living adopted for his boarders, and that he was not willing to do.

He had pointed to the necessity under the new Scheme of providing instruction in French and German as a great source of trouble. It would be much easier if he were not obliged to engage an assistant capable of teaching both languages. (He also regretted having to teach 'Vocal Music', saying it was hopeless in Lincolnshire which was a most unmusical county, the boys having neither voice nor ear.)

All that Durnford could suggest when he had considered the position was that the tuition fees should be reduced and that German should be dropped if there was no demand for it, (though 'due prominence' should be given to instruction in French). The Governors dropped German from the curriculum in September, 1886 but decided not to reduce the fees. And the decline continued.

It was not because of a failure to keep up with the times that Flowers was doing badly. At a time when there was a great demand for more technical education* he introduced more science. Bookkeeping became a school subject, carpentry was being taught by 'a practical joiner'; shorthand too appeared in the curriculum. W. H. Counsell had been appointed to the staff at an enhanced salary because he had 'qualifications of a high character' in

*A Technical Instruction Act had been passed in 1889 by which grants could be obtained from County Councils for the provision of technical education.

Chemistry. (This technical instruction did not meet with approval in 1892 at a County Council meeting. Mr. T. Nettleship disapproved of this idea for subsidising grammar schools : he believed their endowments were originally intended for the good of the poor ; but now they were used to benefit mainly those who ran the schools. In any case grammar schools were effete institutions. He was supported by the Rev. A. Wordsworth Savory, Vicar of Worlaby, who would boldly say that grammar schools were the 'greatest robbers of the poor in the country'. He especially included in that category Brigg Grammar School. It took the persuasive powers of R. N. Sutton-Nelthorpe, speaking as a representative of the 'den of thieves' singled out for mention to carry the meeting in favour of giving a grant for technical education.)

The decline had gone so far by 1900 that in that year it was decided to admit girls as well as boys. But the numbers did not reach thirty until 1902 in spite of this move. Flowers had not liked it at all at first but he made the best of a bad job and after eighteen months' trial expressed himself delighted with the experiment, except for one thing : its deleterious effect on games and the sportsmanship bred by games. He spoke well of the assistant mistress he had been compelled to appoint, Miss Breeze. It was due to her influence, he said, that the tone of the girls was so much better than that of the boys. All the same he was not sorry when she spoke of going in 1903 : it would be better to have a man on the staff.

Because of the obstinate refusal of numbers to rise the Governors contemplated in 1902 looking for a house which could be used for girl boarders. But in 1903 they abandoned the idea. Instead they reduced the age of admission : children of six were admitted.

It was all hopeless. At their meeting on 5th February, 1904 the Governors decided to ask Flowers to resign though he was to be allowed to carry on until the end of the term. His dismissal had been preceded by talk and letters similars to those which drove out Cotterill. In the Lincolnshire Star (26th March, 1904) a typical letter appeared attacking the School as 'only a little removed from the position of a Ladies' Seminary'. Another demanded a Headmaster with a more forceful personality. It was all very much as it had been forty years before, though, ironically, one of the writers harked back longingly to the good old days he remembered fifty years earlier when the School was a place of considerable importance.

But Flowers was not a tired old man : he was fifty-four when he left Brigg. He had started enthusiastically and well ; he had brought boarders with him — and it seems in retrospect a truism to say that when there has been a thriving boarding-house the School has prospered. But Flowers let the boarding-house slide. His mother ran it at first, but after he married and his wife became responsible for it trouble began. His wife was the sister of the Rev. P. H. Brierley, Vicar of Brigg 1879-93, and the daughter of a wealthy man.* She was not interested therefore even in the financial side of a boarding house, particularly as she was said to find difficulty in retaining servants, and according to rumour her husband was driven to paying people not to send their sons as scholarship boarders. He was marked down at once as a man who was giving himself only half-heartedly to his work.

He himself was a most likeable man, popular with the boys and still spoken of by some of them affectionately as 'Dicky' Flowers. He could be severe, and the public birching of three boys at the end of his time at the School told badly against him.²³⁹ As a whole, however, he was considered reasonable and just. Canon A. N. Claye who followed Brierley as Vicar of Brigg spoke very highly of him²⁴⁰ : 'a great lay supporter in my early years at Brigg'. He maintained that Flowers was not fairly treated : he had disliked the co-educational scheme but had had it forced upon him and yet had done his best to make it a success ; it seemed unfair that he should have to take the blame for its failure. Claye was the only one of the Governors, though, to support Flowers.

Flowers left the town† and took up residence at Malvern, coaching private pupils. He died at Orchard Cottage, Geraldine Road, Great Malvern, on 31st October, 1918.

The School struggled on under Flower's assistant, J. A. Bunch and Miss Slatter, but Bunch was not the man to pull the School round and the Governors decided to close it at Christmas, 1905. But the chairman of the Governors was anxious to bring about a resurrection. He set to work drawing up schemes, writing letters, hammering away until in the summer of 1906 the miracle happened. The School re-opened on 20th September, 1906.

The new Headmaster was H. L. Higgins, 'late Mathematical Scholar of Exeter College, Oxford'‡ and his Second Master was J. P. Dingle ; another master was J. Stead, and C. W. Cray taught music. Once more the School was for boys only. (The chairman of the Governors stated in a letter to the Clerk on 27th January, 1906 that if the Board of Education so much as made the entry of girls permissive he would resign.

Higgins brought back the boarding trade (at a reduced charge — £37 a year instead of £40) : eight boys took up residence in

*He left £8,000 to each of his three daughters out of a total estate of £92,000.

†Old boys and pupils gave him a silver rose bowl and an illuminated address when he left. F. H. Symonds, B.A., a former pupil, made the presentation.

‡He came from Grantham School and so did Dingle.

Higgins's own house²⁴¹ and that in itself ensured a good start. Higgins remained only until 1909 ; then in 1910 came H. E. Bryant, B.A. from Dartford. He and his wife (a great asset to the School) had the difficult task of running the boarding-house during the war, and at the end (6th November, 1918) he decided he must retire. The Governors however, persuaded him to re-consider the matter and he carried on : he stayed until ill-health compelled his retirement in 1927.

From 1908 Brigg Grammar School never looked back : already in the Autumn of 1912 there were four assistant masters, Margetts, Vance, Knight and Bartle. In that year there was an official Board of Education inspection of the School ; the Inspectors congratulated the Governors on the highly satisfactory position of the School. Increasing numbers—there were 110 boys in the School in 1916*—meant that more accommodation could be demanded. Mr. Bryant began to agitate for two extensions, one to the School and one to the House. He obtained both, 1911-1912 : a new class room was added to the east of the old building, and a considerable addition was made to the house at a cost of £2,500. A building project of a different kind, one which had been looked forward to thirty years before by Flowers, began to take shape : a swimming bath. A fund was started in 1914, and the following year (in the Summer Term) the old bath in which so many Briggensians learned to swim was opened. The distinctive colour of its water, a deep green suggestive of active marine life, to be known for the next forty years, was already being commented on in the July of 1915.

The end of the war brought other buildings of a less reputable kind than those of 1911-1912. The old Town Cricket Club Pavilion was brought and put into service as a workshop in 1919 ; and in the same year two Army huts were acquired for use as class rooms. Their advent was doubly unfortunate : they were an eye-sore, and they meant that new buildings more in keeping with the old fabric were put off sine die.

Other unmistakable signs of a thriving school life were the first appearance of the Briggensian in the Easter Term of 1914, the emergence of an embryo House system, and the foundation of an Old Boys' Association. The first mention of Houses is in the Briggensian for the Easter Term, 1915. There were only two Houses, † Nelthorpe and Yarborough, and the boarders were distributed, like the day-boys, between these two. The Old Boys' Association may go back beyond 1914 but the earliest reference to it, again in the *Forty-three of them were boarders.

†In 1917 the Houses were reorganised on a territorial basis, and there were three instead of two: Nelthorpe, Yarborough, and Sheffield. Nelthorpe House was formed from boys living south of the main road from Bottesford through Brigg, its boundary cutting the railway at Kettleby and going south. The Sheffield boys came from the Scunthorpe district. (Briggensian IV 1.)

Briggensian, is in the first issue. The President was T. H. Nelson of Staniwells, the Hon. Secretary was A. S. Gibson of Brigg, and the Hon. Treasurer was A. A. Rhodes of Brigg ; among the thirty-five members named were : Dr. Frank Nicholson of Hull,* Dr. H. Munro of Beverley, G. J. Goodman of Boston, G. Goodman of Brigg, S. White of Brigg, A. White of Brigg, D. Munro of Scunthorpe, C. Eccles of Worksop, R. Westoby of Taunton, R. P. Eminson of Scotter, C. F. Herring of Redbourne.

Another event of note was the publication in the Briggensian in 1918 of 'Floreat Schola Briggensis' followed by the initials H.E.B.

With Higgins and Bryant the new era really began and a break was made with the past. It is doubtful if there was a great deal of difference between the School at the end of the seventeenth century and that at the end of the nineteenth : both were rural, small, intimate, almost family concerns ; and neither was ambitious. The new post-1906 School was in line with the new secondary schools shortly to be developed all over the country under the 1902 Balfour Act. The School was still a little apart ; it had a semi-independence which it treasured—and hopes it can still treasure—, but it now came within the scope of such forbidding titles as Regulations for Secondary Schools (1907)'. But once again there was a sizeable part of the School receiving free education.

With the new era came names that are now familiar and full of meaning, and new important developments, new boys and new masters. But, in the words of a different sort of master, 'that is another story'.

*Will of Sir John Nelthorpe, 1669

In the name of God, Amen. I, Sir John Nelthorpe of Gray's Inn in the County of Middlesex, Baronet, seriously weighing and considering the frailty of man's life, how that the days of his pilgrimage are few and evil, and that when we least think of it Death many times knocks at our doors, and when we imagine our mountain most strong then are we nearest being removed, have thereupon esteemed it my duty in time of health to think of sickness and in midst of life to prepare for death, not only by recommending my soul into the hands of my most faithful Creator whose it is and for and by whom it is and was created, but also setting my my house in order before the evil days come upon me, even those wherein I shall say I have no pleasure in them, that so when mine appointed time comes I may have nothing to do but to dissolve and be with Christ, which is best of all : this eleventh day of September in the one and twentieth year of the reign of our Sovereign Lord Charles the Second by the grace of God of England, Scotland, France, and Ireland King, Defender of the Faith, Annoque Domini one thousand six hundred sixty nine have made this my last will and testament in manner and form following. Imprimis I give and bequeath unto all and every my tenants in Market Rasen, Killingholme, Kirmington, North Kelsey, Glamford Briggs, Messingham, Ulceby, Horncastle, West Ashby, and Upper Toynton in the County of Lincoln and in Beverley in the County of York all their arrears of rent which shall be due to me and unpaid at the time of my decease. Item I give and bequeath unto Brian Coverdale, Thomas Uppleby and my tenant the blacksmith of Barrow in the County of Lincoln, to Thomas Hornby, Nicholas Bates, Widow Brampton, and William Douse of Legsby in the said County of Lincoln, and to all and every my other tenants in the said Legsby and in South Ferriby in the said County of Lincoln whose respective rents for the lands they do hold of me do not severally amount to above ten pounds per annum all their rents then in arrears. Item I give unto the Right Honourable

*The English of the Will has been modernised here though seventeenth century spelling has been used in quotations from it in the text. There is no doubt that the use of the original spelling helps in the creation of atmosphere but it adds considerably to the burden of reading several thousand words, especially when the phraseology is legal or technical.

Introduction

THE HEADMASTER'S advance notice of the Tercentenary celebrations stated that this History would be "anecdotal and personal in nature". An endeavour has been made to provide the anecdotal, personal flavour. But no history can be a mere collection of anecdotes and personalities ; if it tries to be, it becomes a joke-book (in both senses) and lacks any thread or backbone sufficient to hold it together. The first article tries to provide this thread ; the more personal contributions form the middle part ; and the final section is a statistical analysis of the utmost value.

It will be clear to all who attempt to read the first section that the writer owes a great deal to the School Magazine. In fact all who have contributed in any way to the Magazine can be regarded as having provided the basic material for this book. The work could well be dedicated to them.

IN 1919 the School was still regulated by the Scheme (No. 466) sealed 16th May, 1907. No important change was made until the 1944 (Butler) Act was passed. Then the Minister of Education drew up Articles of Government for the School on 12th November, 1952. There were to be fifteen Governors; five of these were to be Foundation Governors, one ex-officio in virtue of his being Lord of the Manor of Scawby, one appointed by the Old Briggensian Association, for five years, and three Co-optative Governors, one of them holding office for four, another for three, and the third for two years, all these three appointed by the other Foundation Governors. The remaining ten Representative Governors were to be appointed for three years by the Local Education Authority, though two of them were to be nominated by the Brigg U.D.C. and one by the Scawby Sturton Parish Council. The Headmaster must be selected for interview by a joint Committee consisting of equal numbers of Governors and representatives of the Local Education Authority (the Lindsey Council) under the Chairmanship of someone nominated by this Authority; but the Governors were to interview candidates and recommend one for appointment by the Local Education Authority. Assistant Masters were to be appointed to the service of the Local Education Authority by the Governors in consultation with the Headmaster. The Local Authority could decide the general educational character of the School, but the Governors and Headmaster had the general direction of the curriculum, and the Headmaster controlled the internal organisation, management and discipline of the School, and supervised teaching and non-teaching staffs.

The Local Authority was responsible for the financial side of the School, but the School property was not transferred to the Authority. (This property included the farm at Ulceby and a small amount of land at Tumby Woodside.) The Headmaster's house was excluded from the School premises and with the endowment remained under the control of the Governors.

The 1952 "voluntary controlled" Scheme made perhaps little difference in the School position, since the Local Education Authority had in effect been responsible for the School since 1907, but the emphasis was now more on control from the outside. Dislike of this change had led the Chairman of the Governors in the period 1949-52, Col. O. S. Nelthorpe, to seek some way of preserving or restoring independence, and he and some of the other Governors feared that under a new scheme the appointment of a Headmaster might pass to a larger body with a less intimate knowledge of the School than the older, smaller one. He worked tremendously hard at the idea, but was forced to the realization that independence would mean the charging of impossibly high fees for both boarding and tuition. (Tuition fees were abolished under the 1944 Act.) Doubtless an independent school would have survived, but it would have faced crippling difficulties and would certainly not have been the Brigg Grammar School of today.

Further changes began to threaten in the early 1960s : comprehensiveness began to present a new ideal for schools—or to constitute a new band waggon to be jumped on, according to one's way of looking at it. Inevitably Brigg Grammar School became involved in the argument ; Staff and boys have both held varying views on the matter ; one Briggensian editor gave his views in 1962, "Here at the Grammar School, opinion is almost violently reactionary. The grip of three hundred years of tradition, a blind loyalty to existing institutions, and in many cases a lack of critical self-examination have marked the reaction to various rumours." He went on to warn against a comfortable satisfaction that can so easily turn into an apathetic acceptance. His fears may have been justified, but local feeling seemed to support the existing system of separate schools in Brigg, and the Lindsey County Council seems content for the moment to leave things as they are.

But change is going on. Boys have come here at the age of sixteen (or over) in the last few years from Glanford School and have found no difficulty in settling down in the Sixth Form. More revolutionary still, girls have established themselves among us.

Girls and Brigg Grammar School have had a long association, academically speaking, of course. Under the 1877 Scheme (Clause 57) after the deaths of the former Master and Usher £100 a year was to be paid by the Governors to provide secondary education for girls in Brigg and the original parishes benefiting under the 1669 will. This provision had never been carried out. Nevertheless the girls were called on to join in a desperate attempt to save the School from extinction at the end of the 19th century : they were allowed to enter the School in 1900 and they remained there until 1905. A new scheme in 1906 ungratefully excluded them and they remained without secondary education till after the first World War. The setting up of Brigg Girls' High School affected the Grammar School. As the High School had most inadequate accommodation in 1919, and as their numbers were growing in the 1920s, they were given permission in 1924 to use a room at the Grammar School three times a week. No-one seems to remember how this arrangement worked or how long it went on ; it had certainly disappeared by the late 1920s.

New High School buildings (and a strong fence separating the girls from the Grammar School field) in 1936 might have been thought likely to prevent any further together-ness of the two schools ; but co-education now seems to be gaining favour. Individual High School girls had attended classes at the Grammar School—usually for Sixth Form Physics in the early 1940s and this practice has developed over the years since then. In 1966, however, it was extended to other subjects : at Sixth Form level the teaching of English and General Studies became a joint Grammar School—High School matter. A regular east—west movement of Sixth Formers now began and a writer in the Briggensian thought it necessary to state that the digging of a trench near the High School fence at the beginning of the Easter Term 1966 was “not, as many had conjectured, a trap for unwary High School maidens venturing westward, but the beginning of a water jump for the latest addition to the School’s ever-increasing selection of athletic events—the steeplechase”.

The Headmaster warned (or perhaps informed) parents on Speech Day 1966 that increasing association with the High School was sought. In 1967 Mathematics and this year (1968-69) French and Geography have joined the subjects jointly taught to Sixth Forms ; History has felt the first breeze of change. There is much to be said for this development, though there are formidable difficulties involved ; the scheme is still experimental but may well prove highly successful.

One consequence of this semi-merger was a revival of the controversy over Saturday morning school. Brigg Grammar School had always worked on Saturday morning ; the High School never. But co-operation between the two would be difficult if the working weeks did not coincide. The suggestion that Saturday morning school should end was made towards the end of the second World War. Evidence is provided by a Junior Debating Society discussion at the end of 1944. John Suthers put the case strongly against Saturday School and in spite of (or because of) speeches by Mr. M. Gaze and Mr. A. J. Gregory pointing out that the change would mean the loss of two or three Preps a week for the Lower School and was therefore undesirable, the debate went in favour of a five-day week.

When the 1952 Scheme came into operation the Lindsey Education Committee urged that the School should abandon Saturday work, to fall into line with other schools in the area and to enable expenditure on school buses to be cut, and immediately, whatever the feelings of the lower—or for that matter the upper school might be, officially the proposal was strongly resisted. The Headmaster (N. C. Matthews) led the resistance movement ; as he explained on his last Speech Day in 1958 he had fought for Saturday morning school—“which we all curse at times”—because it meant that, with the Boarding House, the School remained alive all the week ; seven days a week school meant success, he said, in fighting boredom—the great danger.

His view received support on Speech Day 1952, when the Visitor, Mr. E. Welbourne, Master of Emanuel College, Cambridge, (an Old Boy of De Aston School) stated that it was hardly common sense in rural parts of the country to pretend that all activities stopped on Friday afternoon and began again on Monday morning ; “when the cows stop giving milk on Saturdays and Sundays, that will be the time to start talking of a five-day week.”

The Old Boys were mobilised to make their protest : at their Annual General Meeting at the beginning of 1952 it was unanimously “resolved that this . . . Meeting . . . expresses its deep concern at the attitude of the Lindsey County Council Education Committee towards the views of the Governors, Headmaster and Staff of the School on the question of closing the School on Saturdays on the alleged ground of economy. As a matter of principle, we feel that on such questions as this the views of the Governors (several of whom are Old Boys of the School) and the Headmaster and Staff, whose close association with the School better qualifies them to judge what is in the best interests of the School, should prevail and should not be overruled by the Committee.

“We also feel that (having regard to the comparatively small sum involved) the ground of economy does not justify the action of the Committee

“This Meeting pledges the full support of the members of this Association for the Governors, Headmaster and Staff . . . in all matters in which the traditions, welfare and independence of our old School are at stake.”

The strength of the opposition and also the force of the arguments that a five-day week might mean that seventy hours of teaching time would be lost every year, that the saving of £300 a year on buses would be offset by the expenditure of a similar sum on Wednesday mid-day meals (200 each Wednesday), and that even during the war, when men's lives had been at stake, there had been no suggestion that petrol should be saved by the ending of Saturday morning school, prevailed. But it was only a respite that had been won. When the attack was mounted again a few years later there was less opposition and as every other school in Lindsey had abandoned the struggle, Brigg, too, fell into line : the last Saturday morning's work was done on 6th July, 1968.

Subjects taught and methods of teaching have also changed. The School Prospectus of 1929-30 (the last to be issued ?) stated that all boys pursued a common curriculum up to the age of sixteen (changed in 1931 to fifteen for the quicker boys). This common curriculum, it was claimed, laid the foundation of a liberal education upon which every boy's further training must be built, whether he leaves school to enter business or professional life . . . or whether he continues his education at school. “The main subjects studied are Scripture, English subjects (including English Grammar and Literature, History, Geography), Mathematics, French, Latin, Natural Science (Chemistry and Physics), Drawing, Music, Manual Work and Book-keeping have an important place in the School Curriculum.” “Physical exercises are taught to all boys for two periods a week.”

Since 1930 the curriculum has been extended and varied. Even in 1929 German was being reintroduced (it had been dropped in 1886) under A. J. Gregory ; “harsh gutturals sometimes emanate from the Book-Room," it was stated (showing that even then this room was a substitute for a language-lab.). It was to be some time, however, before German ousted Latin as the second foreign language studied. That came after the advent of R. A. Barker. Biology was introduced and strongly developed, especially in the 1950s, by W. E. Thumwood. "Scripture", of course, developed into R.I. (interpreted by many boys as religious instructions—though surely not under the flexible approach and charming tolerance of the Rev. D. Evans ?) Mathematics has recently sprouted a statistical growth for the benefit of non-scientific Sixth Formers. Science has become "Nuffield Science." Russian is taught to Sixth Formers. Book-keeping has gone long ago ; so, too, has the very elementary economics taught in the early '30s, and English Grammar is a forbidden expression. But a new development has been the appearance of "Minority Studies" since 1966 : each Sixth Former now spends a quarter of his school time on these studies—art, music, history, science, statistics, and so on. So far there has been no evidence that success in examinations is imperilled by this change. Its aims is, of course, to avoid the narrowing of outlook brought by undue specialisation.

Another change this last year has seen is the institution of "activities" for the whole School every other Wednesday afternoon for nearly one hour and a half. These "activities" range from contract bridge to electronics ; altogether over twenty "activities" were listed to start the year.

The 1929-30 Prospectus referred to the Preparatory Department for boys from eight to eleven. On Speech Day in 1928 J. T. Daughton said he hoped to start this Prep. Department owing to the large number of applications he was receiving for the admission of boys eight or nine years old. G. W. Cabourne had joined the Staff in 1928 and he was ideally suited to run such a junior branch of the School. It thrived under him and Forms I and II acted as a valuable recruiting source for the senior school. This part of the School lasted, in spite of Board of Education attempts to close it, till it was killed by the 1944 Act and the 11 plus examination. Those boys in the Prep. Department in 1944 were allowed to remain—if they could pass the examination—but no more were to be admitted. So ended by 1946 a system which had permitted boys to remain in the School for ten years or more. Those who seem to hold the record for the longest stay are P. D. J. Campbell and Richard Gaze in the 30s, and Frank Richards, Giles Henthorn, David Bains and Barry Taylor in the 50s. All these clocked eleven years.

Various carrots have been tried at various times to induce boys to work hard and develop interest. As A. I. Morris points out in the next section of this book, in the '20s and '30s Competitions were held. All sorts of talents were encouraged : in 1922 "J. A. Brown proved a champion whistler, while Lee, Holt and W. R. Harrison outplayed everyone else at the piano." These were the years when

E. Urry distinguished himself as both a good map drawer and a writer of poetry ; E. Clark and A. R. Robinson came top in the wireless-set making section ; S. G. Sass obtained a 1st Class for "Animal Study or Portrait". As instrumentalists in these competition years, the outstanding names were V. G. Tinsley, C. Marper, C. South, C. F. Maw and C. Coult. But after 1933 interest in competitions dwindled and died.

Prizes are a time-honoured inducement to work, in conjunction with Speech Day when the prizes are presented. A formidable list of prizes associated with the names of donors has been built up over the years, particularly since H. F. Sergeant in 1927 at an O.B. Dinner recommended prizes for constitutional history, saying that the School had been founded by a man who fought on the Parliamentary side in the Civil War defending the liberties of the people, and Brigg Grammar School in particular, therefore, should show an interest in modern constitutional liberties. He himself then gave a prize worth two guineas a year for a constitutional history essay (and on his death his family ensured that this prize should always be given). Not all prizes were for academic distinction. It is interesting to note that Frank A. Arden, of Glentworth, won a prize for gardening in 1928 ; it may have been only the second prize but it evidently set him on the road to success.

Speech Day itself is an attempt to persuade the School to show itself at its best. On the whole it succeeds, though R. W. Pratt found himself obliged to weed out what he called "groaners", so that the rest of the School should make a respectable noise when singing the songs he so carefully rehearsed with them for Speech Days.

Another method to keep boys up to the mark was introduced in 1945. Quarterly Orders were to be drawn up every three weeks on the basis of marks given for work during these periods ; they were at first read by the Headmaster to the whole School after morning assembly ; but soon it became more convenient for him to go round reading the order to each form and making appropriate comments—or disturbing requests. For some years this system continued ; then it became half-termly, and eventually a reversion was made to terminal orders because it was becoming increasingly difficult after the first three years to give meaningful form positions. From the fourth year in the School boys were streamed, not by forms but by subjects (for things like languages and mathematics) and their positions applied to their subject sets rather than to their forms.

Parents' Evenings have been a feature of the last twenty years. The first one was held in the Easter Term 1948. One hundred and fifty parents attended. In one respect this evening set the pattern for the future : the time of starting was 7-30 and all was expected to be over by 9-30 p.m. In fact considerable numbers were discussing or patiently waiting to discuss an hour after this time. This feature has repeated itself constantly ever since. But the practice, started in 1948, of putting on sideshows has proved too onerous to continue :

art exhibitions, physics and chemistry laboratory experiments, a workshop class—and later library displays, and dissecting of frogs, cockroaches and earthworms. Nowadays Staff and parents confine themselves to talking to each other. This may have come about partly because some parents found taking an interest in the lab. experiments too hazardous. One of them said it was inadvisable to ask the wrong questions, at any rate of the boy doing the experiment. “The master in charge did at least show a sympathetic attitude to the wondering parent.” The institution has proved popular with parents, though N. C. Matthews on Speech Day in 1952 said the previous Parents’ Evening had been referred to as a “comic do”, but as there had been two hundred and fifty parents present it could probably be counted a success.

The focal point of the meeting is naturally the Headmaster. A parent wrote in 1952 that the Headmaster, supported by the grand piano (“a much needed aid”), caught one’s eye by the length of his queue, and many a parent seeing this decided to try for an interview another day.

External examinations have been an accepted part of the life of the School during the whole of this fifty year period under review. The Governors in May 1919 requested the Rev. F. Burgess (then Vicar of Brigg) to conduct the Cambridge Local Examinations at the School in place of his predecessor, the Rev. Dr. A. N. Claye. Those were the days when a person other than one of the teaching staff was asked to supervise, robed in full academicals, the Local Examinations. But by the end of the ’20s schools were conducting their examinations without outside help. By then, too, the Cambridge Local Examination had become the Cambridge School Certificate Examination, taken by all in the fourth or fifth year in the main school. Those who stayed on in the Sixth Form then took the Higher Certificate Examination. These examinations continue to exist, though in 1951 they became examinations for a General Certificate of Education at Ordinary and Advanced Levels.

The only real difference between 1919 and 1969 examinations at the School is that many more boys take both examinations especially that at Sixth Form level.

One consequence of the development of Sixth Forms and their examination needs has been the growth of the School Library. A start had been made at the end of the first World War. Miss E. A. Hinchcliffe in 1918 took charge of the Library ; there were then about thirty books on the shelves. Periodicals taken regularly were the “Illustrated London News”, “Public Opinion”, “Model Engineer” and “Hull & Lincolnshire Times”. Cases were being made, it was said, to preserve periodicals. And a series of portraits had been hung on the walls. These presumably were the portraits of Longfellow, Emerson and Byron which were to be found on one wall or other of the School for the next forty years. At the end of 1922 it was announced that the Library had been re-organised in all departments ; the Headmaster had been able to get several old books of great importance for the Reference Library.

The Library was then accommodated in what was called the Reading Room in the Assembly Hut, and boys were invited to become members of the Reading Room and to pay a subscription. With the money thus collected and with a £5 a year grant from the Governors books and periodicals were bought. Mr. F. Allen presented a book of Elizabethan Homilies in black letter type and Calvin's Institutes (1564) in Latin. A slightly different kind of gift was an old Syrian flint-lock pistol presented by an Old Boy, Lt. Commander Pawley.

It seems to have been felt by 1924 that this was all rather a hotch potch and it was decided to exclude periodicals as they were unduly expensive and were not sufficiently widely accessible. Instead, over forty new books were bought—"all good literature". And more subscriptions were invited. The usual library problem then presented itself : how to house the new books acquired : eighty new ones were bought in 1925 and room could be found for them only by the discarding of older books. One of the Governors, J. Talbot Cliff, came to the rescue and gave "a magnificent mahogany bookcase" for the Reference library. (This bookcase now houses Junior Library books outside the Woodwork Room).

By 1925 the Library was properly organized. M. Gaze assumed responsibility soon after his arrival in 1922, though he received help from 1926 to 1930 from A. E. Reed. Malcolm Gaze continued to look after the library until he retired in 1946. From 1925 a Library Committee was formed. That of 1925 consisted of J. C. Lott, W. E. Gasar, J. P. Kemp, Spilman, Templeton, White, R. A. Wright, Lockwood, Peacock, and the "Prefects and Staff".

The Library's home shifted from one room to another : it was housed in LVa room, then in form I room, and by 1929 in LVb : all these situated in the old huts. But when the 1931 building programme was completed the Library found the room it was to occupy for the rest of this period, in Room 4, then used as a Sixth Form Room, though since 1952 known simply as the Library. (Throughout its existence this room has had a chiming clock hung on the wall. It has ceased to chime, however. Something went wrong with the chiming mechanism many years ago. As a result when the chime spring is wound the clock starts to strike and goes on without ceasing until the spring is quite run down. The less serious-minded members of the Sixth Form found it hard to resist the temptation surreptitiously to wind up the spring at the end of term. Not every one could enjoy so prolonged a joke and the practice had to be discouraged. During the 1930s the bookcases on the east wall there were fixed. There was to have been a separate library room built in 1939 ; but the war came, and instead of a new Library we got air raid shelters.)

During the '30s the Library was classified and a card index made, though this index was clearly intended to be for the use of librarians rather than users : it was said to help "in the checking of the books".

After 1945 one scheme after another was suggested for re-housing the Library : in one of the upstairs form-rooms, in the old School-rooms, in a new building sited on the Headmaster's shrubbery between the drives. All have come to nothing. But the number of books continues to grow. In 1942 it was 1,370 ; by 1954 it had reached 2,580 ; in 1956 it was 4,000, and today the Library possesses between 5,000 and 6,000 books.

One change at least was made : in 1953 the Dewey system of classification was adopted. The change over was a major operation and its successful completion was due largely to David Leaning, though he had the help of D. H. Thompson and a number of boarders, pressed or willing. As late as 1957 the Library was the scene of labour by one-fingered typists bashing out a new catalogue. In spite of all difficulties the Library has worked successfully, thanks to a series of conscientious Library Prefects and their assistants. They have deserved a better, more spacious, working area.

Aids to learning or learning without tears have been provided in several ways ; the most popular has probably been journeys both at home and abroad. It has been easier to arrange foreign visits since the end of the second World War, if only because the idea of seeing "abroad" has been taken up by the whole population. But visits to France and elsewhere were made in the '30s. In the summer of 1932 seventeen boys and M. Gaze and A. I. Morris joined a cruise to see the Northern Capitals (as described in the next section), not so ambitious, perhaps, as the Mediterranean cruise enjoyed by a party taken by J. Knox in 1967, but exciting enough in 1932 ; and in 1938 a party led by A. I. Morris, helped by M. Gaze and W. E. Thumwood, spent a week of the Easter holidays in Paris. Oliver Kingdom said he thought Versailles drab and "in need of a spring clean" : "the whole place seemed fusty". "Some consternation and amusement", he added, "were caused by a mischievous member of the party who opened a window [at Versailles] and set all the burglar alarms ringing." There was arranged a visit to the Opera House to see "Andromaque" ; but some of the party, it was alleged, preferred instead to see Laurel and Hardy in English. The visit was nevertheless a great success, even though the return crossing was rough, and "seven disembarked at Newhaven in the early hours of the morning with vivid pea-green faces."

It is interesting to note that over thirty years later another party (still led by the ever vigorous A. I. Morris) visited Versailles and grouped themselves for a snapshot in a place where the earlier group, containing the fathers of several of them, had been photographed.

These later visits to Paris in the 1960s found comfortable accommodation mostly at the Lycée Janson de Sailly, but also on one occasion at the Collège Stanislas. At the former school all came to know and admire M. Daubigny, their chief guide who, it appeared, could walk all day and talk almost as fearfully—unfortunately for some, invariably in French, though always learnedly and informatively. The last four visits to France (two of them arranged by V. Atkin after the retirement of A. I. Morris) were different from earlier ones in that the party consisted of our boys and some girls from the High School. The arrangement seemed popular with both sexes.

A variation on the French tour was provided in 1962 when S. G. Jarvis and M. Payn took a party of boys to Italy, visiting Florence and Venice. And in 1965 visits to Germany to the Leibniz Gymnasium in Pirmasens, the school with which we are linked for such purposes, began: three members of the Staff, R. A. Barker, J. Cole and C. W. Mailing, went with twentyone boys. Next year the Headmaster, accompanied by R. A. Barker, Mrs. Barker and C. W. Mailing, took twenty boys again to Pirmasens. On these visits boys and masters received hospitality from members of the German School, and these members in turn visited England and were entertained by us. It was later gathered that one of the most successful aspects of the first of these visits was attendance at a wine tasting, though some, it seems, failed to realize that the operative word was “tasting”.

Parties have gone at various times to other parts of England either for the day or for longer periods. In the '50s a number of trips were made to Stratford. Doubtless the first-class acting was enjoyed but a somewhat riotous home journey with a break at Leicester probably gave as much enjoyment. There have also been visits to London, one or two of these organised by D. V. Adams, lasting four days. A Lake District Walking and Youth Hostelling tour was led by D. Jones in 1959. And visits to Derbyshire for walking and climbing (V. Atkin and D. Jones again very much concerned) are still a popular school activity.

All these tours were organised. A variation has appeared recently. The Governors offer travel scholarships to a limited number of senior boys each year. All that is required is that the boys explain their plans; they organise the whole thing themselves; and at the end they produce a written and illustrated report. A. Jackson, J. Pimlott and J. Couch went to Norway in 1965, and in 1966 M. J. Drury, J. A. Broome and R. W. Pigott went to Sweden. The scheme provides valuable training and gives a lot of pleasure: even the writing of the report is undertaken enthusiastically.

Grammar Schools run on public money and the watchdogs expect to be given evidence that the money is well spent. Hence the existence of H.M. Inspectors of Schools; not hence nowadays, however, these tears. It is recognised that Inspectors are human and helpful; and certainly Brigg's experience of General Inspectors has been far from terrifying. That is not to say their approach is greeted with anything but modified rapture ; there may be some concern : agitato ma non troppo.

There have been only four such visitations in the last fifty years, though there would have been a fifth had the coming of the war in 1939 not stopped it. The first took place at the end of 1923 and ended with the report that the work as a whole was marked by earnestness and enthusiasm. Six years later the comment was : "The Boarding House is an imposing building, well designed and equipped. With its present numbers [they were then 270] the School is handicapped by its unsatisfactory classrooms. Much good work is being done. The School is full of life and vigour, and continues to enjoy a full measure of public esteem."

There was a wide gap after 1939 caused by Hitler's ambitions : but in 1948 (a new Headmaster having appeared only a year or two earlier) down came the invading Inspectors again. The Briggensian remarked that they had appeared to enjoy their visit here and seemed glad of an opportunity to teach. The report they made was again approving. But what gave the Headmaster as much satisfaction as anything in the report was the remark made by one of the H.M.I.s to him : "We go to many schools and we meet the boys in the streets. The majority look the other way ; a number raise their caps, but few, like your boys, raise their caps and smile." Another said : "I like you, I like your staff, and I like the manners of your boys." One feels on these occasions that inspections and inspectors justify their existence.

September 1962 saw the fourth of these General Inspections. Again all went off well. Whether such full inspections are needed is sometimes questioned. Certainly visitors to a school receive an early impression which is rarely altered by subsequent acquaintance. As one H.M. Inspector said on one of these General Inspections : "You can tell as soon as you enter a classroom whether the class is a going concern."

Judged by examination successes the School has been "a going concern" over the last fifty years. These successes have been gained at school and subsequently at university. In December 1918 it was announced that P. C. Clark had been awarded the Beckwith Engineering Scholarship at Manchester University, with a Bursary at Hulme Hall. Four years later we were told G. Armour was the only male student to get a mark of distinction in his second year's Medical at Glasgow University ; in 1924 he received the Sir Stewart Graham Gold Medal in Rhinology, an honour which had not been awarded for several years before ; he also received the William Hunter Bronze Medal in Gynaecology ; and in 1927 he was Herkless Prizeman in Clinical Medicine, Burns Prizeman and Lister Prizeman in Clinical Surgery, and Lister Prizeman in the Practice of the Surgery Class ; not surprisingly he was placed first in his year. Ten years later he was still going strong, being awarded in 1937 a prize by the Hunterian

Society for an essay on Etiology, Diagnosis and Treatment of Rheumatoid Arthritis—a competition open to the medical profession throughout the world.

It needs to be remembered that in 1925 there were only twelve to fifteen in the Sixth Form, and though more boys were staying on at school after the ages of fifteen and sixteen, the war (1939-45) reduced the size of the Sixth, and it was not until the '50s and '60s that our present size—70-80—was reached. But there are one or two distinguished names in the Speech Day Prize List for 1925 : W. E. Grasar and E. W. Kemp, though their outstanding achievements were to come later.

Nevertheless, in the '20s and '30s there are successes to record. R. O. Lee at Emmanuel College, Cambridge, in 1926 was awarded a £40 scholarship. E. Wells won a Scholarship at Sheffield University ; F. T. Goodman obtained a State Scholarship at Kingston Agricultural College. W. Bains was one of the very short list of those getting a First Class in the Intermediate Examination of the Law Society. S. G. Tinsley, at Keble College, Oxford, was given an Open Scholarship in Natural Science in 1931. D. P. Wright won an Open University Exhibition in Modern Languages at Queen Mary College, London, in 1936. H. E. Dibben in the same year gained a Science Scholarship at University College, Nottingham (and was also offered a bursary at Keble). J. Hammond obtained an Open Scholarship at Nottingham. G. Peirson in 1938 got the School's first State Scholarship, "with distinction standard in eight of his ten papers". (It secured a whole day's holiday for the School in consequence). And John Gregory took first place in the country in the Naval Cadetship Examination (though it must be confessed that he had spent some years at Christ's Hospital since leaving Brigg).

In 1939 there came news of success won by a much older Old Briggensian : Dr. Frederick G. Neave. (It was claimed for him that he was one of the old "Legsby Scholars", i.e., those "poor boys" from the villages of Legsby and Fulsby who were provided for specifically in the 1669 Will. He was not really one of the "poor boys", who had suffered rather unkind treatment at the School in the earlier part of the 19th century, but one who benefited under the 1877 Scheme. This scheme laid down that there should be two boarding scholarships worth £40 a year to be competed for in the first place by boys from Fulsby and Legsby. Dr. Neave had won one of these scholarships). There is no question, though, of his success. After leaving school he had taken up law as his profession, graduated at London University and later became a Doctor of Laws. For more than fifty years he practised as a solicitor in London and for much of that time acted as one of the examiners of the Law Society ; he edited two text books on Commercial Law and produced a Law Dictionary. He died on the Golders Green Golf Course at the age of 73.

From 1939 academic successes came at a faster rate.

K. G. I. Jones won a State Scholarship in 1939, R. Gaze obtained a First Class in Chemistry in 1940 at London and R. F. Hudson did the same in 1943. Alan King won an Exhibition at Manchester University in 1940. After the war R. P. Holmes won the Marmaduke Shield Scholarship in Human Anatomy at Cambridge University for the second time. He then obtained the Combined Hospitals University Entrance Scholarship to St. Bartholomew's Hospital Medical School, and Trinity College also awarded him the Woodward of Bitten and Past Scholars' Exhibition, the Potts Exhibition and the Mathison Prize. He took First Class Honours in the Natural Sciences Tripos Part II (Anatomy). Brian Tierney got a First in History at Cambridge.

The success which was in some ways most pleasing during these years was J. E. H. Kingdon's Open Exhibition in Science at Pembroke College, Cambridge in 1947. This was (as far as is known) the first open award won from the School to Oxford or Cambridge. But others followed. B. D. Bowles and R. Bonsell won Open Exhibitions in History, the former at Exeter College, Oxford, the latter at Pembroke College, Cambridge, in 1952. Alan Corney got an Open Scholarship in Physics at Keble College, Oxford, in 1958. A. G. Bowers won an Open Science Exhibition at Hertford College, Oxford, in 1961. A vintage year came in 1962 when D. C. Head gained an Open Scholarship at Corpus Christi, Cambridge, D. R. J. Rawlinson an Open Exhibition in English at Brasenose College, Oxford, and O. A. Hartley an Open Exhibition (for P.P.E.) at St. Peter's, Oxford. In the following year A. J. P. Ayres won an Open Scholarship in Physics at Brasenose College, and J. A. Charlesworth an Open Exhibition in P.P.E. at Jesus College, Oxford. In 1966 K. Beer obtained an Exhibition in English at Hertford College, Oxford, and J. N. Peters an Exhibition in English at Pembroke College, Cambridge, while J. L. Stephenson got a Science Minor Scholarship at Wadham College, Oxford. Next year I. W. Hutchinson secured an Open Award in Chemistry at Brasenose College. The best year of all has been 1968-69 when R. W. Tuley won an Open Scholarship in Mathematics at Pembroke College, Cambridge, N. Miller a Minor Scholarship in Physics at Wadham College, M. B. Tatam an Exhibition in P.P.E. at Christ Church, and A. R. Tate an Exhibition in Mathematics at Brasenose College, Oxford. On top of his Oxford award Miller has been offered an English Electric scholarship worth £3,700.

State Scholarships have been much more frequent since "Goff" Peirson's time: R. Bonsell and B. D. Bowles got them in 1951, C. R. Redpath in 1954, A. Corney, J. B. Dale, J. H. Furniss, and R. B. Taylor in 1957; P. N. Jarvis and D. C. Rhodes in 1960; A. J. P. Ayres, J. R. Disney, O. A. Hartley, D. C. Head, D. R. J. Rawlinson, and H. H. Stennett in 1962; and J. H. S. Brain, M. Hickling, N. Miller, R. C. Smart, A. R. Tate, R. W. Tuley, and M. B. Tatam in 1968.

First Class degrees have been awarded since 1950 to Peter Hall (Mediaeval History at Nottingham), J. I. Rickett (Engineering, Oxford), A. Collins (Engineering, Sheffield), A. Nicholson (Industrial Metallurgy, Birmingham), R. Shelton (Chemistry, Oxford), W. Rickatson (Chemistry, Sheffield), R. B. Taylor (Chemistry, Leeds), Peter Carter (Physics, Leeds), and D. C. Rhodes (Physics, Oxford).

Other Old Briggensians have distinguished themselves in other ways. In 1955 Walter Jackson was awarded the Williams Prize for a paper on "Cold Coke Oven Gas Firing of Large Open Furnaces" by the Iron & Steel Institute, a coveted prize awarded only for papers of considerable distinction. Canon E. W. Kemp in the same year preached the sermon in St. Paul's Cathedral on the occasion of the opening of Convocation. "As is traditional, Canon Kemp preached the sermon in Latin." Also in 1955 F. Fieldsend was promoted Chief Superintendent in the Metropolitan Police Force ; at forty-four he was the youngest to hold that rank. He had graduated from the Police College at Hendon and had obtained an Honours degree in Law at London University. The following year it was announced that W. E. Grasar, D.C.L., S.T.L. (now the Roman Catholic Bishop of Shrewsbury) had been appointed Vicar-General of the Nottingham Diocese ; he had formerly been Vice-Rector of the Venerable English College in Rome, a position not achieved, one feels, without academic distinction.

There must be many more examples of outstanding work and success. One in particular perhaps should not escape notice ; Col. J. G. T. Eccles was appointed High Sheriff of Lincolnshire in 1967. He may not, however, be the first ex-pupil of this School to hold this office. According to a manuscript note made by the late Canon A. N. Claye in his printed Brigg Church and Town, 1904, Edward Parker of Glanford Brigg was Sheriff of Lincolnshire in 1770. "He is believed to have resided in a large house at or near Brigg (now pulled down)." (The building, recently demolished, behind the offices of the Lincolnshire Times, bore the initials E.P. over a doorway). In the Register of Admissions to Peterhouse, Cambridge, 1615-1911, there is an entry : "Jul. 5. [1759] EDVARDUS PARKER annos habens novendecim e comitatu Lincolniensi in Schola Publica de Briggs . . .". There was no "Schola Publica" in Brigg other than the Grammar School in 1759.

A world war was bound to affect the School in lots of ways. One result was an increase in numbers, largely the result, probably, of an influx of families and boys to what was considered a relatively safe area. In 1939 there were between 290 and 300 boys in the School; by 1942 there were 335, and J. T. Daughton on Speech Day then recalled how "early in my first term H.M. Inspector paid a visit . . . and said, with emphasis and what appeared to me to be apparent pleasure, 'Well, Mr. Headmaster, I suppose you realise that within two years your numbers will be below 150 ?'" (At that time there were 240 pupils in the School.) By 1944 numbers had risen to 372 and were to rise in the '50s to over 380. This increase raised in an acute form the problem of accommodation ; it was quite impossible to get any new building done in the war. The overcrowding was uncomfortable and did little to help maintain standards of work and discipline.

There were also Staff shortages and those members who were left were usually employed in doing a number of things outside their work at school : Special Constabulary, Civil Defence and National Fire Service, Home Guard, or A.T.C. Even before war broke out it was noted in the Magazine that several members of the Staff, with the Headmaster, had throughout the Summer Term been "studying Anti-Gas precautions and First Aid and have in their turn tried hard to take examinations". One recalls the sight of the Headmaster and the A.R.P. Chief in a corner, baffled by the intricacies of reef knots and bandage application.

At the end of the summer holidays and even at the beginning of term in 1939, boys and masters were at work excavating trenches for shelters along the north side of the field and in the corner between School House and the garden. The actual shelters were professionally constructed (though lighting was provided by W. E. Thumwood and H. Pimlott). The day-boys' shelters were hardly used except for the first few alerts ; and indeed it would have been difficult to enter them after winter rains had fallen. Even by half-term when orders were given to clear out the shelters it was remarked by one of the cleaners (K. C. Bell) that there was so much water in them that only boys with a one-length swimming certificate should be allowed there.

The Marist College in Hull was evacuated to Brigg but it managed to maintain a separate identity by using the former High School buildings. A few Marist boys eventually joined the School but most had gone back to Hull by the end of 1940.

Many changes had to be made. Speech Day had to be held in the morning. School matches had to be reduced in number. And side-games for the whole School, held every day except Wednesday, Saturday and Sunday, from 3-45 to 4-45, had to stop, for good as it turned out. In order to provide a juvenile labour force for lifting the potato harvest, from 1940 the Christmas term began earlier and there was a fortnight's break in October. Many boys worked and earned money in gangs at various farms—e.g. Mr. J. Herring's at Wrawby, Mr. Maw's at Cleatham, Mr. J. Day's at Redbourne. Altogether in 1942 there were about 250 boys picking potatoes. There is a photograph in The Briggensian for December 1940 showing G. W. Cabourne with a number of boys (Alan Bratley, C. R. Turner and P. J. Cabourne are recognisable) in the woods at Scawby sawing pit-props.

The early part of the term before the potato-break was used for Athletic Sports, most successfully as the weather was good, there was no competition from cricket or football, and there was adequate time for training—especially as many boys were already fit from holiday exertions and fresh air.

Inevitably in the war there was some lowering of standards. From May 1940 there were regular air-raid alerts at night (lasting usually till day-break) and all were soon exhausted ; surreptitious naps tended to be taken in school, and Prep. had to be cut down. Not surprisingly there was inattention, and The Briggensian noted the following incident in a lesson on conjugations. “Now, aller belongs to the second conjugation.” King was either dozing or paying no attention. “King, what conjugation did I say ?” “Church of England, sir.” The Magazine also recorded an alleged remark in 1945 by a master to a member of the Upper Sixth : “You’ll have to start to do homework”.

There were complications added because, when the Home Guard started, some senior boys enlisted in it. “It is sometimes awkward [1942] to have a Home Guarder in the boarding house. Can one send a note to Headquarters and say, ‘please excuse—— from defence exercises tonight, because he has misbehaved and has had to be sent to bed early’ ?”

Travel was awkward, too. N. H. Boocock outlined his personal travelling problems during the war : “I get up about 6-15 a.m., catching the 7-0 a.m. train to New Holland ; there I take the 7-30 a.m. train to Barton-on-Humber, where I catch the 8-0 a.m. bus to Brigg. Returning I take the 3-50 p.m. bus to New Holland, and the 5-10 p.m. train from there, which gets me to Goxhill at about 5-30 p.m. On Wednesdays and Saturdays I catch the 12-50 bus to New Holland, and a train at 1-38 p.m. from there which arrives at Goxhill at 1-58 p.m.” In the first World War Charles Tyson of Goxhill caught a train at 7-15 a.m. and changed at Habrough or Barnetby, to arrive in Brigg at 8-45 a.m. He, too, had reached home at 5-30 p.m., though he could not get home earlier than 3-30 p.m. on Wednesday and Saturday.

Travel difficulties for country boys had existed always, though they could be exploited. An Old Boy wrote in 1929 that he had met Joe Tong (1915-18), and had been amused by his relating how, when he was at school, he had been in the habit of deceiving “a certain geography master” with descriptions of repeated punctures when he was late, although he really travelled to school on a horse. (Incidentally, at least one boy was still coming in on horseback regularly as late as 1931).

Whether the war caused formal discipline to be relaxed and an easier relationship between masters and boys to be established is debatable. One’s recollections of the ’30s do not include impressions uncomfortable stiffness or Teutonic rigidity. When a boy (today farming near Brigg) listened with fixed gaze and apparent fascination to an art disquisition by G. W. Cabourne, at the end of it to burst out with a remark that he admired his master’s tie, the master was deflated but unenraged. And when about 1929 a young resident master, bending down to adjust a bicycle chain, received a resounding thwack on the rump from a passing Prep. Department boarder, the heavens remained where they were and no thunderbolts were hurled.

The tendency today seems to be towards a democratic 'participation'. Boys no longer pay blindly each term into a Sports Fund administered solely by the Headmaster ; since 1964 a School Fund Committee consisting of masters and boys has been in charge of the fund. They decide how the money is to be spent. We no longer have selected prefects. From the beginning of this school year every member of the Upper Sixth is automatically a prefect. And members of the Sixth Form have a common room, comfortably furnished by comparison with the Staff Common Room, and have also a room set aside for private study.

But not all are satisfied. M. B. Tatam's recent article in The Briggensian declared that "the British School is the most totalitarian unit in the country today. The Headmaster, and under him the other masters, have complete power over the boys". He ends by saying, "Overthrow this tyranny ! Pupils of the School unite !" There may be a tongue in the cheek here. At any rate, freedom to criticise masters and institutions—the Establishment—exists in a wider form today than ever before.

In one respect the system has not yielded much : School uniform is still worn. But school caps are no longer obligatory for boys after the first two years, and one can see approaching the time when it will no longer be possible for new boys proudly to wear the cap some weeks before they arrive at the School. The blazer, introduced in 1928, and made regulation wear after 1945, remains, however, and so does the tie.

The emphasis has on the whole been on moderation rather than uniformity. The Briggensian's editorial commented in March, 1957 on the Headmaster's circular to parents "not so long ago", explaining what articles of clothing and colours were permissible for boys to wear at School. "There was consternation among the ranks when it was learnt that flamboyant pullovers and socks were out !" It was not long however, before "some bright youth" began to wear his pullover ("of the flamboyant variety, of course") underneath his shirt ! "This campaign against authority stimulates the inventive mind." "These socks, in various revolting shades of pink, green and orange . . . show up rather more vividly than the ordinary sock." Regulations and good taste here seemed to be at one.

There is hardly any aspect of school life which remains static for long. There have been changes in Assembly, Timetable, Houses and Magazine. In Assembly before 1944 the Headmaster had conducted Assembly (in the musical sense also), even on occasion singing a solo verse of the hymn. From 1945 R. W. Pratt appeared as conductor—or "human metronome".

The time-table was altered in 1945. For many years before there had been seven periods a day, and the two afternoon periods lasted from 2 p.m. to 3-30 p.m., allowing a subsequent hour for games. Now the day had eight (slightly shorter) periods, three of them in the afternoon which lasted from 1-35 to 3-35. As double games periods were now provided for all forms the change was "vastly to the liking" of the boys ; but the short mid-day break was not so welcome to the Staff. Although we have this year reverted to a seven-period day we retain the longer afternoon session.

There had been three Houses in 1917, including all boys, day and boarding : Nelthorpe, Yarborough and Sheffield ; but in 1922 School House appears to have taken on a separate existence. Evidently this re-arrangement caused Nelthorpe to lose some good footballers, though their Captain, H. Markham, asserted stoutly they were not downhearted. Nelthorpe must have had fewer than 50 boys against School House's 62, and Sheffield's 60 ; but Yarborough was the smallest with 45. And when Yarborough had one of its periodic transfusions in 1924 from Sheffield, the latter House's Captain, E. Levinson, lamented that in the process it had lost four 1st or 2nd XI footballers. Sheffield had additional cause for complaint in 1927 when the new Grammar School at Scunthorpe began to entice away its members. By 1935 Nelthorpe had grown so large again that it was split and the rib taken from its side became Ancholme House. Five Houses meant more House Matches—an excellent thing, though for a time it caused a reduction in the number of School Matches.

It is difficult to say with accuracy who the House Masters have been over the whole period ; but A. E. Knight's association with Yarborough was probably from 1922 to 1958, when he was succeeded by S. G. Jarvis. Nelthorpe had A. J. Gregory from 1922 to 1935, when A. I. Morris assumed command ; and when he retired in 1966 R. A. Barker took over. W. Lamb was Sheffield Housemaster from 1922 until his death in 1937 ; he was followed by W. E. Thumwood for a short period and then E. Urry took charge till he went into the R.A.F. in 1941. G. W. Cabourne carried on as Housemaster till 1945 and then gave way to E. Urry ; in 1951 the latter was succeeded by H. Pimlott and when he left in 1965 E. Jackson became Housemaster. F. Henthorn has been Ancholme Housemaster since 1935.

The official School Magazine, The Briggensian (there have been rivals, notably Scope in the early '60s, which were sometimes brilliant and always shortlived) has appeared regularly throughout these fifty years. Guidance was supplied in the '20s by M. Gaze and A. E. Reed, but the man who was most identified with the Magazine, almost to the point of being the Magazine, was T. G. Richards. It is a splendid memorial to his work until his untimely death in 1964. A school magazine has to perform a dual function, providing a record and giving scope to emergent literary talent. T. G. Richards never lost sight of either aspect.

have objected to a magazine which told them what had happened : they knew about that already if they were boys, and if they were Old Boys they might, as E. F. Brown, Hon. Sec. of the O.B. Association, did in 1927, take exception to a magazine containing fifteen pages of cricket scores, especially if the magazine contained only thirtyfour pages altogether. He thought more space might have been given to the efforts of "budding literary geniuses". He must have been expressing the opinions of many others and the editors, R. M. Morgan and E. Dobson, committed themselves in 1927 to the view that "a school magazine should be the medium for the expression of individual thought and character. A boy who sees an article written by himself . . . destined to be read by many . . . is spurred to greater deeds, while others are encouraged to write themselves". It is probably true to say that the Magazine publishes more original and imaginative material than it used to, but keeping the balance always presents editorial problems, not less so since July 1962, when the editors announced their conviction that a school magazine must provoke.

The first photograph or illustration appeared in April 1928—a photograph of the 1st XI. After that photographs were regularly re-produced until 1962, when rising costs presumably excluded them. (The price of the Magazine had been 6d. in 1921 and dropped to 4d. in 1924 ; today it should be nearer 2/6). In an attempt to keep the price down advertisements have been zealously sought ; the first came in April 1928 : Walter H. Shaw & Co., and W. B. Robinson. Over the years advertisements have increased and the steady support of J. Clark, G. W. Brocklesby (Senr.) & Sons, Ltd. since 1928, and since 1957 of Pennell & Sons, Ltd., S. E. Walker & Son, Spencer Molloy, Ltd., Everett Jackson, Ltd., Brigg Electrical Co., Ltd., Laws Soft Drinks, John A. Jackson & Son, Ltd., W. A. Sass, Ltd., has been much appreciated. So, too, have the advertisements in the '60s of the R.A.F., Lysaghts Steelworks, the National Coal Board, Appleby-Froddingham Steel Co., the Midland Bank, the Trustee Savings Bank, the Scunthorpe Co-operative Society, the Ministry of Defence, and the Lincolnshire Constabulary.

The cover of the Magazine has varied : up to 1927 it was white ; then a pale blue cover with Gothic type took its place. Not for another twenty-eight years was there a new look ; then in 1957 the cover was modernised and the face-lift was renewed twice in the '60s. The Magazine is now, thanks to J. Coley's design (1967), glossy white with no capital letters : quite up-to-date.

The steady rise in numbers of boys and the development of academic and other activities have not been accompanied by a corresponding increase in buildings. There must have been a time when the School was adequately housed but it was a long time ago, possibly when the School was first built in the 1670s and in the 18th century when numbers dwindled so badly. Rarely since then has there been enough accommodation. Good intentions for the remedying of this deficiency have existed in plenty, but every time a full-scale building programme has been produced there has been either a world war or a severe economic crisis to hold it up. Perhaps it would be safer for everybody if Brigg Grammar School never tried to expand.

After 1918 ex-Army huts were bought as a temporary measure, but the Governors had in mind permanent additions and considered a possible sale of part of the remaining endowment. They went into the matter with the Lindsey County Council but in the end were driven to the decision that adequate permanent buildings were beyond their means.

Boys, however, continued to grow in numbers as well as in stature. In the Christmas term of 1918 the "record" of 150 was achieved ; six months later the number was 210, and in 1926 it was 258. Mrs. Bryant, when giving away the prizes on Speech Day in 1923, urged the building of a School Hall. But the General Inspection in the same year seems to have produced merely the unhelpful suggestion that the Woodwork Room might also be used for Art teaching. As can be seen in the aerial photograph of the School in 1925, reproduced in the 1959 History, there had then been no additions to the School buildings since 1911-12, except the wooden huts.

For the next few years "make-do and mend" was the rule. The canvas partition or screen in "Hut 3" gave way to a wooden partition which caused the movements and "sonorous voices" of IVa to be less audible in Vb room. Also one of the huts—the "Assembly Hut"—was divided to make a new form room and a new cloakroom. In 1928 a stand for cycles (only in 1968 removed as a result of the Swimming Bath improvements) was made by boys under the instruction of H. E. Shute, along the ten-feet-high wall erected in 1878. And, with the aid of a Fete a new Pavilion was put up ; it was little more than half paid for when it was opened officially on 5th June, 1929. The Pavilion clock, still going and keeping excellent time in the 1960s, was presented by Mr. and Mrs. J. T. Daughton.

But things were happening. It was announced in 1929 that the Lindsey County Council was to spend £8,000 on new buildings : science laboratories, a new cloakroom and lavatories, a system of central heating and even, possibly, more class-rooms. At the end of the year the huts were moved to make room for the builders, though these "symbols of poverty" were not to disappear from the scene for many a year to come.

As the new buildings began to take shape in 1930 joy was tempered by exasperation over the consequent disorganization : School Certificate examinations had to be held in July 1930 in the "Sanatorium" as it was still called, and the Sixth Form was scattered over the whole School. The Briggensian thought the greatest appeal the new buildings would have for most was the two-storied part ; "Little foresight is needed to imagine the delight with which some of our number will run up and down stairs and run along lengthly corridors, exploring every nook and cranny, and the readiness with which regulations will be made in consequence. Even some of the Sixth have dared to suggest that their form-room would have been better placed in one of the upper rooms, their reason being that others would only abuse this privilege, and that some trouble would be experienced in preventing small boys pushing their friends over the balcony rail."

Although "a chaos of mud and mortar met our eyes at the beginning of term" (September 1930), a new School did begin to emerge during the next few months. B. W. H. (odlin) went into technical matters to describe the new buildings. He explained that the brickwork was laid in English bond ; the whole of the basement and foundation walling up to the damp course (of slates laid in cement) was built up in cement mortar, as were also the tops of stacks and all arches ; all the bricks were of salt glazed type well wetted before being laid so that the cement in which they were laid set hard. The mortar used was composed of one part of lime to two parts of sand mixed with water till a uniform mortar was obtained. Approximately five tons of lead (one square foot of lead weighing six pounds) were used in making watertight joints between roofs, in gutters behind chimneys, and beneath the slates. All wood other than panelling received four coats of paint of old white lead and best linseed oil (in addition to the priming coat).

Gradually the laboratories and class-rooms were finished and came into use ; five new class-rooms upstairs and one on the ground floor. The Staff acquired a common room ; they had previously received hospitality in School House from the two resident masters who allowed them to share their sitting room. The new Staff common room had previously been a class-room (and in the dim ages previous it had been the Usher's Kitchen). The Headmaster was installed in his present room (at one time the Master's Kitchen). The new chemistry and physics laboratories were clean and airy places compared with those which had been used for some years : the chemistry lab. had been likened to "some gloomy, subterranean cavern" "which on a dark December afternoon with a thick haze of fumes must have seemed a fearsome place to those who . . . entered those portals". Where laboratories had been the present cloak rooms were created, with shower-baths (which for some time were not used as much as had been expected).

Lord Yarborough declared the new buildings officially open on Sports Day, 13th June, 1931. The cost of the building had been well over £10,000, and the Governors had to sell some of the endowment to pay their share. But the School looked incomparably superior to what it had been. P. D. J. Campbell wrote that when he entered the School in 1924 the old main School, standing amidst huts, "seemed as much out of place as the jewel-like eye in the ugly head of the toad". Appearances were not improved by the shabby corrugated iron fence round the Swimming Bath. All was not perfect in 1931 : the old huts—veterans of World War I—were still far from fading away. There was still no gymnasium or assembly hall. But the School looked modern ; by the end of 1931 electricity was being installed. And even the Sanatorium, used since 1927 as a Refectory for the day boys, was having alterations made. There were no cooking facilities : boys brought sandwiches and drank the tea provided in the Refectory by Mrs. Steele, wife of the caretaker ; but at last an attempt at proper provision was being made. During the war the necessary improvements were made : the old kitchen became a scullery ; the small room was made into a kitchen, and the large one became the dining room. In 1942 200 boys (in two sittings) were provided with a hot meal at sixpence a day by Mrs Fairbanks and her helpers.

In 1936 the School had been startled to hear that the Assembly Hall and Gymnasium were to materialise ; additional class-rooms, a biology laboratory, woodwork room extensions, a Library and a satisfactory refectory for 150 day boys were also promised. Negotiations and argument were spua out to 1939, by which time it was too late : there were too many other things to worry about.

After the war shortages and crises continued, and though in 1951 the Headmaster said he hoped semi-permanent building might soon be provided he lamented that nothing was promised about the provision of a gymnasium. It was absurd, he said, that 340 boys should have to do P.T. on “an uneven concrete playground in all kinds of weather. Unfortunately today the Grammar Schools are the Cinderella of the Educational System, not because they have failed in the past but presumably because they have done too well”.

The cry was taken up in The Briggensian where R. Bonsell and B. D. Bowles declared that lack of proper accommodation meant the Lower Sixth had “to content themselves among the fossils, skeletons and entrails in the Biology Laboratory. A partition dividing two form-rooms has to be removed each morning to improvise an assembly hall . . . It is impossible for the Sixth Forms, split as they are into so many different groups, to have lessons together in one room, and much of their time is wasted searching for empty rooms or in invading School House (much to the annoyance of the maids, hampered in their cleaning operations) during the years that are most important to those facing examinations”.

The cries were heard. Work started towards the end of 1952 : “the racket and clatter of a cement-mixing machine has aggravated the usually slow tempers of masters teaching in the huts this term”. By the end of the Easter Term 1953 the Medway block was in use. It had three rooms, all for the Sixth Form, as well as a store room.

Once this sort of change began, it seemed difficult to stop. A special room for the School Secretary was built in 1955, the materials paid for by the Education Authority, the labour provided by boys in the School. Then the Quadrangle was repaved. In 1956 the Appleby-Frodingham Steel Company offered to build and equip a Sixth Form Physics Laboratory and this was soon built at the north end of the Physics Laboratory, the roof being left flat, Col. O. S. Nelthorpe hinted on Speech Day, for the Local Authority to add another story later. In the same year a new Woodwork room, a Biology Laboratory and an adjacent Sixth Form room with cloakroom accommodation were added. The old Woodwork room became the Art room. Now the old huts were really at the end of their career here. "Rumour has it that they were in danger of being preserved by the Ministry of Works as historical ruins." They were, however, found a use for as chicken huts by G. M. Neish.

Most important of all, the Gymnasium-Assembly Hall and a new Swimming Bath were on the way by 1957. Various methods were used to stress the need for a Hall. Alderman A. W. Harrison, then Chairman of the Lindsey County Council Finance Committee, related at an Old Boys' Dinner in 1957 how the "very astute Headmaster" arranged for him and a small committee of two Old Boys (Col. J. G. T. Eccles and Alderman T. Raby) to visit the School at Assembly time. It had been, he confessed, a trying experience: not only had he to get up specially early, but the Assembly was crowded. "They stood me next to Col. Eccles, and every time anybody wanted to come in, we had to go out into the passage." "The proceedings," he continued, "commenced with the hymn 'For those in peril on the sea', and shortly after that one of the boys fainted. That meant we had to go out into the passage again."

The committee accepted that the need for a new Hall was great, and, with the aid of the Governors, the Gymnasium was in use by September, 1957. The School was indebted to John Weightman of Broughton for the gift of a gymnasium store and to Col. J. G. T. Eccles for a present of many tons of slag chippings for the gymnasium surroundings.

The Swimming Bath, with its filter plant and changing-room, was completed in 1957. The old one (40 feet long) had been very useful and had seen excellent performances by such swimmers as Peter Dibben, Peter Gray, G. Hilken, J. B. Bell, D. A. Pearce, D. A. Taylor and many others in the '30s, and by R. H. M. Markarian, J. Kingdon, R. W. Stringer, T. R. D. O'Neill, M. Silverwood and J. N. Melless in the '40s and '50s. But it took a day and a half for emptying and filling even after 1937 when the new Regional Water Supply became available. It was also small, so that a Master had to say to a small boy who persistently got in the way: "Blundell, you're only microscopic, but you're still too large"; and later, during some inexpert diving: "This is the wettest bath in England". And D. W. Tatam in 1958 said his father, G. F. Tatam, still thought of the Bath as a place to ferment water into a greenish fluid before having it pumped on to the School Field by the town fire engine.

J. T. Daughton had started a Swimming Bath Fund about 1930 but it had reached only £47-13-0 in 1940. After the war with the aid of the Old Boys a fete was held in 1947; it raised over £650.

and most of it went to the Fund. The Old Boys worked to raise more money : by 1957 £3,000 had been raised ; an appeal to parents then brought in other £400 in six weeks ; Old Boys contributed again, and with a donation from the Governors' endowment fund the final sum of £5,500 was raised. The Swimming Bath, 60 feet by 20 feet, designed by H. M. Etherington, was opened officially by J. T. Daughton on 20th July 1957.

The latest additions are three more semi-permanent class-rooms (1964 and 1965). There seems no room for much more unless the School Field and Headmaster's gardens are sacrificed. But additions and improvements are being made to the Swimming Bath. Again it is the Old Boys who are at work. The original scheme of heating and covering the Bath seems beyond attainment at the moment. But heating will certainly be here in 1969.

It should be added that School House obtained another common room and a changing room in 1955, when also the Headmaster's "sun parlour" was put up.

The School Field has been extended and improved during the fifty years here considered. P. D. J. Cambell's 1934 retrospect stated that the Field in 1924 resembled "a country meadow deep with cool luxuriant grass, interspersed with not a few nettles and thistles, as we who used to track each other in its verdure often found to our cost", but there was a fairly large space in the middle cut "fairly close" for cricket matches. In 1924 and in 1927, however, the work of levelling an area near the cricket pitch was partly carried out. Even so the ridge and furrow of earlier times were clearly visible and presented considerable difficulty to those responsible for laying out the (352 yard then) athletics track. The new pavilion, with a wooden surround provided by W. Watts and his boys in 1939, added to the amenities, but until the whole field, with the exception of the cricket platform and the 1st XI (now the 2nd XI) football pitch, was ploughed up, levelled and seeded in 1948, the field was far from perfect. At the same time the paddock which had belonged to Mr. E. I. Brown, of Thornholme, was bought by the Local Authority and with the removal of the trees and intervening hedge the School gained another two acres.

The story of the games, athletic activities, music-making, dramatics, and societies over the half century alone would fill a book. All that can be done here is to indicate their scope, success and failure. In 1919 cricket and football were the principal outdoor activities, though there was swimming and there were Athletics Sports. Today besides these we have tennis, hockey, basket-ball, badminton, golf and sailing, and at various times rugby and squash have been played.

The standard of cricket and football has inevitably varied over the years. In the '20s the 1st XI was stiffened by the inclusion of Masters against club sides but there were sound players among the boys. Against Brigg Town on the Manor House ground in 1921 H. A. G. Hepworth scored 52, and A. E. Knight and the Rev. H. Lee bowled out the Town for 81. S. Smith ended the season with a batting average of 18.67. The first recorded century was by A. E. Knight in 1928 against the Town. There were strong sides in the '30s, with L. W. Collins outstanding, his batting average in 1938 being 39.1. After the war the outstandingly successful years were the late '50s with R. Carter, D. Oates, G. Sells, R. Dobson, R. Holmes, M. J. Cowling, J. Holland, all producing excellent results ; and the early '60s—the days of E. P. Haines, M. Robertson and B. E. Gillespie.

From 1931 to 1939 regular Cricket Weeks were arranged by A. E. Knight at the end of the Summer Term, when Old Boy Sides met visiting teams, one of them usually a Lincolnshire Club and Ground XI.

Soccer too has had a strong hold from the days when “ ‘Tank’ Jarman, a lusty youth who is now [1930] in Canada and plays for the national Soccer team ‘The Sons of England’ ”, and others like Horton, Oates, Moody, Piper, Levinson, J. Clark, J. W. Weightman, Morgan, Sumpter, Wells contributed both vigour and skill. The tradition was carried on by L. W. Collins (who scored 52 goals in 1938/9), S. H. Douce, J. S. Scarborough, C. J. Windass, J. F. Ward, R. Holmes, G. Oates, B. M. Butler, R. Dobson, E. P. Haines, J. Boulton, R. East and J. D. Allcock, to mention only a few.

Athletic Sports and Cross-country running have both developed enormously. The first Sports Day was held in 1910 and the first School Cross-country race took place on 2nd April, 1930, when a dark horse who had trained secretly, S. G. Tinsley, came in first. W. T. Good said Tinsley was never seen over the course during training, and he was scarcely seen on the day of the race, he went so well. Athletics Sports in the '20s included a three-legged race, and egg-and-spoon race and throwing the cricket ball. Over the intervening years these events have disappeared, their place being taken by shot-putting, javelin and discus throwing, hurdles, steeplechase and triple-jump. Records have risen steadily, though B. W. Whitesmith's long jump of 20 feet $2\frac{3}{4}$ inches in 1938 was not beaten till P. White bettered in by one inch in 1964.

Cross-country running has never been popular though it tends today to be the enthusiasm of an esoteric few. A writer in 1942 spoke of the start of the race then : “ as impressive as ever . . . and the usual mass . . . surging across the field with the most unusual people in front, committing a species of hara-kiri . . . or had the news leaked out that the photographer was in Grammar School Road ? Number 1 out of the gate . . . finished 122nd.” In 1946 the comment was : “There seems to be a widespread notion that this cross-country running is for heroes or odd individuals who happen to be good at it. It is an annual source of wonder that in one school so many boys should discover in the month of March that they are tender plants suffering from a wide selection of known diseases, and even (as happened this year) from one not yet identified.” The prominent names in cross-country work have been N. Conboy,

R. Girdham, R. Davy, R. Cobb, R. N. Coulthurst, J. McLauchlan, R. N. Day and W. Eldridge, whose 1968 time was a record. Concerts and plays, occasionally given by the Staff, mostly at first under M. Gaze's direction, but often by the boys with or without Staff assistance, have gone on throughout the fifty year period. Much histrionic ability has been shown and developed and a great deal of pleasure given, though there were some perplexed members of the 1928 audience for "Dear Brutus" who thought it three separate plays. The school did not do a full three-act play until "A Midsummer Night's Dream" was given in the open air in 1945, with O. Baudert as Theseus, R. J. Sumpter as Hippolyta, J. C. White, A. N. Jones, J. A. Rhodes, J. H. Cheeseman, A. G. West and C. Eccles as rude mechanicals. R. W. Pratt wrote the fairy music. Later plays starred R. Dod as Saint Joan, D. R. J. Rawlinson as the Dauphin, J. Cox as Megaera in 'Androcles' and J. Pimlott as Henry V.

For some years after the war the annual Christmas Concert, owing so much to R. W. Pratt and the late T. G. Richards, was a great draw : collective Staff musical talent (or at any rate honest endeavour), School Orchestra, choirs of boys, and individual boys contributed. Names of boys that spring to mind are G. ("Noel") Jackson (piano), J. A. Askew, R. Leefe, R. Jeffrey, G. Henthorn, B. Motson, M. B. Thomas, J. Holland and D. C. Rhodes (vocal). The Staff's Boar's Head Carol (with A. I. Morris taking the solo) was almost the signature tune of these concerts. And at later concerts J. C. Woolley, R. A. Chapman, D. Jackson, R. H. Corney, K. J. Sykes, G. H. Barker and P. W. Robinson demonstrated the wealth of instrumental talent available.

Almost every kind of activity has sprung into existence here since 1919. At different times (and in some cases for all the time) there have been a Rifle Club, a Debating Society (with a Junior Branch), a League of Nations Union, a Natural History Society, a Radio Club, a Philatelic Society, a Gardening Club, an Art Discussion Circle, a Geological Society, a Scientific Society, a Geographical Society, a Historical Society, a Bible Reading Fellowship, a Student Christian Movement Action Group, a Philosophical Society, a Young Farmers' Club, a Camera Club, a Jazz Club, a Fishing Club, a Model Railway Club, a Bird Watching Society, a Tape Recording Club, a Swing Club, a Mountaineering Club, a Fossil Club, a Drama Society, an Electronics Club, an Organ Society, a Model Aero Club, a Fencing Club, a Zoological Club and even a Shorthand Club. They emerge, sometimes retire for a period, but usually re-emerge, occasionally with a different name.

The School Scout Troop has flourished since 1934 and, although the absence of S. G. Jarvis during some of the war years hampered scouting, enthusiasts like Raif Markarian kept the troop alive. While the war was on another activity, the School A.T.C. flight, came into existence. There had been a Cadet Corps formed in 1916 with the Headmaster as officer-in-charge, but it was disbanded in 1926 : the prevailing atmosphere was then becoming unfavourable to any sort of military activity. The A.T.C. received ample support when it appeared in 1941 and, as W. E. Thumwood, who commanded it, said when it was disbanded in 1945, it had trained 188 cadets, half of whom had entered R.A.F., Navy or Army ; and five had died.

No school can thrive without schoolmasters and no school history can be complete without mention of them. Four Headmasters have served the School in this period, and all of them well. Something is said of the first two by other contributors ; they both had to cope in the difficult war years and both suffered in health in consequence. Each of them is remembered with affection by many Old Boys. N. C. Matthews retired after fifteen years in the saddle but he had achieved much in that stretch of time : new buildings, new subjects in the curriculum, a bigger playing field area, the winning of more scholarships. He certainly imposed his stamp on the School. The record of his successor, the present Headmaster, speaks for itself ; the School is being pulled by him into a new educational age.

To the many other Masters who have laboured here it is impossible to do justice now. Men of the calibre of A. E. Knight, W. E. Thumwood, M. Gaze, A. I. Morris, T. G. Richards, H. Pimlott, G. W. Cabourne, to name only some, cannot fairly be dismissed in a few words. The School is their creation. But as one of them said on retiring, there seems to be no lack of able hands ready to take over. No-one need take too seriously the light-hearted comments of LIVa in 1956 or 1957 (admittedly a vintage year with D. R. J. Rawlinson, O. Hartley, A. Weston, G. M. Gunson, D. Head) : "History happened a long time ago. That is why history masters are all so ancient. You know when they are coming by their slow, heavy footfalls, so you have plenty of time to put away whatever is engaging your fancy, be it schoolbooks (not very likely), white mice, or sweet paper . . . English masters are very keen to get on with the job ; in fact they are so keen that they hardly ever notice the drawing-pins which loving fingers have placed on their chairs. Things like the Ancient Mariner and transitive verbs throw them into ecstasy. They are not usually sombre in clothing and have flashy ties . . . French Masters are not nearly so keen as English Masters. They have a habit of running their hands through their hair (if any) . . . They have another habit of throwing things about when they are in a frenzy or distressed . . . Maths Masters are all so terrifying, when they come in you could hear a pin drop. Maths Masters thrive on things like pythagoras and simple interest."

There is another important person who seemed almost to be on the Staff in the 1950s, so frequently was he to be seen about and in the School. That is the late Chairman of the Governors, Col. O. S. Nelthorpe. He presided for forty-two years over the governing body, and his interest in the School grew the older he got. His was a familiar figure on Sports Day, sitting on his shooting stick, his hat tilted over his eyes, on Speech Day when he invariably produced an apt Latin tag, and at the Old Boys' Dinner proposing "The Guests", as N.C.M. said, "with dry humour and a sly twinkle". Fortunately for the School his son and successor, Lt. Col. R. S. Nelthorpe, is following vigorously in his father's footsteps.

Finally there are the Old Boys to be touched on : nothing more than that is practicable. The Old Briggensian Association was in existence well before 1919, but the first annual dinner (at the Woolpack) was not held till 1923. The dinner has been held every year except during the dark war years. Much has been owed to the succession of Hon. Secretaries, E. F. Brown, J. W. Cowling, A. Lyon, E. Urry, J. B. Bell, W. T. Good, A. Turner, and A. F. J. Farmer, as well as to the efforts of people like R. Kettle in the '30s and M. Gray in the '50s to form local cells at places like Grimsby and Wakefield, and also the present Chairman, R. M. N. Spring.

As had already been noted the Old Briggensians did much to make possible the re-building and improvement of the Swimming Bath. Their organization of the Walk to and from S. Ferriby was a masterpiece of organization (T. R. D. O'Neill, D. Bains, A. Wood with some of their wives as ministering angels during that night of doubt and sorrow) ; and it produced a large quantity of money. The success of a School may well be measured by the strength of its Old Boys' Association.

We end with two quotations, the first by R.G.W. [alker], 1934, and the second by E.A.H., 1918, which seem to carry the right valedictory note :

"Another term winds up another year ;
A year of glories, losses, triumphs won ;
New faces seen, familiar faces gone,
Departed friends now seeming doubly dear,
Whose absence seems to rob the atmosphere
Of all its old-time jollity and fun,
A carefree world, changed to an empty one,
A world devoid of all its former cheer.
Gone now are all those happy, careless days ;
For gone are all the friends that I esteem,
To drift apart, and go their several ways,
A fading memory, merged into a dream.
To make true friends is hard ; no words can tell How hard it is to bid a friend farewell."

"B.G.S.

"She stands, an unassuming building in a gentle part of the country ; to understand and appreciate her, you must work in her precincts through long months, for only in so doing will you understand the steady charm she spreads over those who grow to love her."

IN THE BEGINNING

DR Henthorn's admirable history of the school up to 1919 closes with a comment on the satisfactory state of the school in that year, and on the promise for the future. But the years following the First World War must have been difficult years. Dr Henthorn refers, at the end of his book, to the advent of the army huts that were to be a depressing feature of the school for so long. One of my first recollections of the school at that time is of being advised that the Autumn Term, 1919, my first term, could not begin on the appointed date, since the new accommodation was not ready. Indeed, we had several days of unexpected holiday. Then again, the years that followed the war saw a rapid succession of staff, some of whom stayed for no more than a term or two. Some of them I will try to mention later.

I was one of a group of Lindsey Junior Scholars from Crosby School, Scunthorpe, a fairly large group indeed for those days when the total number of Junior Scholarships for the County was relatively small. But we represented a triumph for that grand old Headmaster, George Taylor.

Getting to school was a stern business, in stark contrast to the door-to-door service provided today. We had to leave home about 7 a.m., walk $1\frac{1}{2}$ miles to the station, catching the 7-25 train from Scunthorpe. A 40-minute wait at Barnetby, usually spent in football with a small ball on the station approach, or in doing homework in the waiting-room, then a 10-minute ride into Brigg and we arrived in Brigg about 8-45.

New boys on the train were allotted to compartments supervised by train prefects. My first prefect was Ronnie (Didymus) Hill. There was a stern initiation procedure, that of "bending". New boys had to do the rounds, one each day, of the several compartments and were first of all invited to sing a solo. A reasonable performance lightened the ensuing physical test which consisted of being beaten by all the members of the compartment, the weapons being school text books.

The railway strike of 1921 meant that we could not get through to Brigg. There was a partial service, but no connection from Barnetby. The train arrived at Elsham about 10-30 a.m., but even with prefect escort it was usually near noon before we arrived at school. Lunch break was 12-45 to 2 p.m. in those days and the trek back to Elsham had to begin at about 3 p.m. Of course, some boys took advantage of this situation to stay away but others, more determined, cycled daily.

It was probably this strike which decided Lindsey Education Committee to change the transport system, for in the following term the boys exchanged the comparative comfort of rail travel for the buses which came on the road with the inauguration of a service between Brigg and Scunthorpe by the newly-formed Progressive Motor Company. This company, hailing from Wellingborough, had brought a fleet of buses, some of them new Straker-Squire single-deckers and double-deckers, but some were redundant London General Omnibus Company buses, old double-deckers still bearing destination boards showing "Marble Arch", "Piccadilly" and so on. One thing all these buses had in common was solid tyres. Roads then were bumpy and dusty, so travel was not all that pleasant, especially when, as often happened, boys were compelled to travel on the top deck in winter conditions. The inauguration of bus travel for us was satisfactory from one point of view. On the first day there was a considerable amount of snow on the roads. The first bus failed to negotiate Mottle Ash Hill, so we were transferred to the service bus which was behind and which was to go through the woods to Scawby. This one reached Greetwell and then heeled dangerously over (it was a double-decker), in a snowdrift. We were then taken back to Scunthorpe. This state of affairs lasted two or three days. Breakdowns were not infrequent, much to the delight of the boys.

In 1919 boys were given a number on entry to the school and this was to be used as extra identification in text books and so on. At this time also we used the public school system of identifying boys of similar names, with the result that we always had a Smith or Clark Major, Minor, Tertius, Quartus, Quintus and so on. My first Form Master was the late and much-loved Tommie Sumpter. After service in the latter part of the war he served on the staff for a year or two before going on to St. John's College, York.

So many changes have taken place that it is difficult to recall the exact shape and appearance of the school in the early twenties. There were four Form rooms in the old main school, two of them opening off what have been for many years Rooms 1 and 2. There was no corridor, so that access to these smaller rooms, one of which was where the present staff-room now is, was through the other rooms. There was no central heating and these four rooms had enormous open fires. There was a minute cloak-room with a mere trickle of cold water and this was situated roughly where the area at the foot of the stairs now is. There was no first floor. Outside the main building were the huts—one running at right angles to the main building, and divided into two rooms, and one running alongside the old swimming bath. In addition there was a woodwork hut and another corrugated structure nearer to the house. The Headmaster had a study which, along with a senior Form room, had been built on to the main school. These latter were demolished when the alterations took place in 1931. Conditions were certainly primitive, compared with those of today—no hot water, no central heating, no school meals, crude laboratories where the cloak-rooms now are.

But now let me try to recollect some of the personalities and incidents of those years. Like all new boys I gazed in awe at the gigantic 5th and 6th Formers. I believe that the first school match which I watched was against De Aston and resulted in a heavy defeat, the unfortunate goalkeeper being Roland Richardson, lately Director of Education for Grimsby. Other giants to me were W. E. Kirkland, S. V. Eccles, the late Charles Dunham, W. W. R. Adair, Mick Marshall, "Bags" Hepworth, "Ching" Cross, Sid Smith, Ken "Tank" Jarman and so on. One year senior to me were the Alexander twins, Eddie and Billie, identical in appearance and always wearing kilts.

Two incidents which have become legendary and which are almost always mentioned by some one at Old Boys' Dinners, took place in my time. The inadequate nature of the chemistry lab. perhaps made supervision difficult. Certainly there was much pilfering. I remember one boy, who shall be nameless, who fitted up a miniature lab. in his own home from his "borrowings" which included even such things as tripods. The Etherington incident is the most celebrated of all. Henry Etherington, a very able scholar, had helped himself to a generous lump of sodium metal during an experiment. Going across the playground to the old lavatories (they did have water-carriage!), he either panicked or embarked on wanton destruction, and threw the lump of sodium into a lavatory bowl. The result, of course, was quite devastating, and by the time that it had been described by various boys, it had assumed staggering proportions.

Another "chemical" incident was when Edward Dodd took some yellow phosphorus, wrapped it up and put it in his desk. When he inspected it during the lunch-break there was instant combustion and the whole school had to be evacuated until the fumes subsided. Mr Bryant regarded a pair of severely-burnt hands as ample punishment but he did suggest that the time was opportune for him to make some practical use of his bent for chemistry, and helped him obtain a post in the laboratory at John Lysaght's steelworks.

Much might be said of the staff if space permitted. Before mentioning individuals, I ought to refer to the staff plays which were a feature of those days. Aided by friends from the town, the staff put on a succession of plays. I well remember "Tilly of Bloomsbury" with Dorothy Couldrey, William Lamb, A. E. Knight, and A. J. Gregory, and "She stoops to conquer" with Lamb as Tony Lumpkin.

A. E. Knight was then, as always, a tower of strength, both in school and on the games field. I can still see him leaving the door of the house (the staff-room was in the house then) and signalling as he did so to the VI Formers to ring the bell. In my day he was, I think, sterner than in his later years, always respected and always loved, but never feared.

Quite the most picturesque character, I suppose, was William Lamb, picturesque because of his lovable ways and poses. Inevitably, after a soccer match (and he was a quite brilliant inside forward who narrowly missed a Blue at Oxford), he would limp into school. During bouts of minor illness he would come into class armed with a bottle of medicine from which he would take periodic swigs.

A number of ladies joined the staff at this time, the best-known and most successful, of course, being Janet Wragg (Knight). She, with her excellent discipline and efficiency, and her dry humour, was quite different from one Miss Beeley. This latter person I could not, myself, please at all. She, in fact, had a rough time.

Junior French and Latin were largely in the hands of A. J. Gregory, but there was a succession of Senior French masters, Simmons, Barnes, ten Haaf, and Hebb. The most remarkable of these was M. ten Haaf, an excellent teacher and a stern disciplinarian. Legend had it that after one night out he fell through the staff-room window. At any rate, he disappeared soon afterwards.

Mr H. E. Bryant (Bod or Pecker), was a quite remarkable man in many ways. Many will remember his extraordinary "revision" lessons, each form having one per week. In the one period he would write up on the board some eight to ten arithmetic problems, and while the class busied themselves with these he would inspect all their exercise books, stamp them and allot a mark. With his tall figure and bearded dignity, he always seemed somewhat remote, but there was a great deal of kindness under the stern exterior. He became a little absent-minded in the middle twenties; one remembers his appearing with a trilby hat and gown on one occasion. He, like Lamb, always wore a mortar-board.

Looking back over 40 years it seems to me that those of us who wished to go to a university had to do so the hard way. "Careers" as a subject did not exist. Most of the information which I needed came from M. W. Thomas, a History Master with ambition, and from the late H. A. Shute, Chemistry Master, who eventually left to become Head Master of Carre's Grammar School, Sleaford. Of course, there was not the spate of information coming to the schools from Colleges, Universities, and via the newspapers that there is today.

The main examination then was the Cambridge Senior Local, later to become O Level. This was usually taken, at any rate by the abler boys, in four years. This meant that successful boys would enter the Sixth Form at 15 plus. My recollection of my first year in the Sixth is that it was a disorganised and largely useless year, with far too many private study periods for a 15-year old boy. The Higher Certificate was not generally taken at this time. Instead, we took particular examinations according to our needs, the Lindsey Senior Scholarship, then a competitive examination, the 1st M.B. and so on.

Games went on much as now but not in such great variety. The field was not as level nor as big as today, but the cricket square was usually good, even if the outfield was at times long. "Parson" Hales was a well-known figure, both in the town and on the school field. I think his exact occupation at school was gardener. His headquarters was a curious little hut which stood at the corner of the house garden, near the small gate which led from the field. This was known as "Parson" Hales' Palace.

In the early twenties the refectory was used for its original purpose, a sick-quarter for the boarders.

Another innovation, a welcome one, was the opening of the shop across the road by Mr Glover, and it was quickly established as the school tuck shop.

In 1919 there were three Houses, Nelthorpe, Yarborough, and Sheffield, and the boarders were divided according to their homes. Subsequently, School House was formed, about 1922, I think.

The status of the school was then, as now, high, and the wearing of the school cap was something to be achieved. We had no other distinguishing marks at that time—no school tie and no school blazer. For some strange reason, about 1924, it was decided to abolish the well-loved cap with the school badge, and substitute a cap with two light blue rings. Different outfitters produced caps with differing widths of ring and in differing shades of light blue. The result was deplorable, but fortunately, after a few years, probably when J. T. Daughton took over as Headmaster, the school reverted to the original cap.

BRIGG GRAMMAR SCHOOL FIFTY YEARS AGO

AT the time when the "History of Brigg Grammar School" breaks off (1919) accommodation was somewhat restricted, as may be seen in the air photograph of 1925 (reproduced in "The History" at page 161). The main room of Old School was already divided into two classrooms by a folding partition. On the north of this main room, instead of a corridor, there opened two square classrooms with fireplaces in the corners. These had once been rooms in the Master's house. A new room and a small Headmaster's study (added in 1912) were at the east end, but this annexe was demolished when the range of laboratories and classrooms was added about 1930. The science laboratory with its willow pattern wash-basins for sinks, backed on Grammar School Road to the west of the court, and it later became the showers and cloakrooms. Across the road was the workshop and its small garden intensively cultivated by the boys.

The First and Second Forms, under Miss Couldrey, occupied a galvanised iron hut standing between Old School and the House. This hut had originally been the Head's garage. There were also two long army huts, acquired about 1919, each divided into two classrooms, one of them by boards and the other by movable screens made of brown hessian. This latter hut had a low platform at one end.

The boarding house looked much the same outside as it does now. The Staff Common Room was in the House, just across the passage from the side door. The swimming bath of 1914 had been excavated by more or less voluntary labour by the boys, and it had a dark but commodious changing-room at the east end.

The insistent increase of numbers caused the school's main problems. Population was swelling, and the determination to give boys a secondary education was intensifying. Scunthorpe and Barton had no secondary school. Many of their boys, and in Brigg, and from the surrounding villages, were qualifying for Lindsey junior scholarships. Hence the need for huts. A few eager boys came in by train from Crowle and beyond, arriving half-an-hour late in the morning and leaving a quarter-of-an-hour early every afternoon. H. E. Bryant, under whom the School had leapt into renewed life, was hampered by the authorities' fear of excessive spending, but Bryant was also economically minded, and he kept expenditure down in every possible way. One assistant (Simmons) remarked during a national economy campaign in the early twenties that Bryant should be Prime Minister. When J. T. Daughton became head in 1927 one of his first improvements was to provide every classroom with a usable blackboard, to the horror of some Governors.

Morning assembly was held in the hut running east and west, with its hessian screens folded back. The hymn tunes were played by Bryant on a harmonium. The boys and the staff knelt on the floor during the prayers. Every Monday morning the Head read out class lists for all the forms, based on marks given during the preceding week.

Young masters came and went, but the core of the staff already consisted of the Head for French and Latin, A. E. Knight for Mathematics and Science, and he was also a first class cricket coach, while W. Lamb taught Latin and Geography. Lamb is remembered for the high standard of neatness he demanded and secured, such as clear writing and wonderful coloured sketch maps. He also commanded the Cadet Corps, twenty or thirty strong, which Bryant had started during the War. Miss Wragg's subjects were English and History, while A. J. Gegory took French mostly, and Miss Couldrey's subject was Art. Miss Wragg became Mrs Knight and Miss Couldrey became Mrs Page after a few years.

Bryant was one of the last of the old-fashioned type of teacher who believed that a master or mistress should be able to take any subject. His own teaching was thorough but elementary. Strange to say, when one boy wanted to learn Greek and another German, teachers were available. Shorthand and Book-keeping, however, failed to find experts, and Bryant struggled with these subjects. His manner of inflicting the cane was a model of decorum. It was a dignified and judicial proceeding without any anger or hesitation, with another master always present as a witness.

At Christmas 1921 H. A. Shute from Reading joined the staff to teach Chemistry, and to take over the Boarding House from Bryant, who moved into a house on the hillside at Wrawby, about a mile away, walking or driving his car to school every day. Shute, in addition to being an exceptionally thorough Chemistry teacher, was a skilled amateur carpenter, and he took classes in woodwork during the first few years of his stay in Brigg. He was largely responsible for the design of the new Chemistry laboratory. He and Mrs Shute managed the boarding house until he became headmaster of Carre's School, Sleaford.

Soon after Shute's arrival, W. E. Thumwood came from Morpeth to take Physics. He also superintended the garden around the workshop, and organised frequent nature rambles on bicycles. He designed the new Physics laboratory, and insisted upon the few extra feet that jut out at its northern end.

A young master named Peake made a short stay but left his mark because late in 1921 he suggested that the staff should perform a play, and "She stoops to conquer" was his choice. The play was produced on two successive evenings just before Lent in 1922 with the help of two young Brigg ladies, Miss Hubble and Miss Goodman, also of Mr Page, a bank manager, who was soon to become the father-in-law of Miss Couldrey. Lighting was by two Old Boys, the sons of J. T. Kettle, one of the Governors. A platform was rigged up at the east end of Old School by laying table-top boards on desks, while a blank corner was filled by a blackboard with "Caution" chalked upon it.

Other plays followed on safer stages. Miss Marjorie Allen joined the caste for "School for Scandal" at the Parish Hall late in 1922, and she took the name part in "Tilly of Bloomsbury" a year or so later, the young ladies having refused to act in "Hobson's Choice". "Tilly" was the first of a run of plays given in the Exchange Hall, including Barrie's "Admirable Crichton". Shute and Lamb constructed solid scenery which was adapted again and again. "Dear Brutus" was notable for the acting of Miss Stewart, a mistress at the Girls' High School, who proved a most valuable adapter of costumes in later plays. This series continued with "Ambrose Applejohn's Adventure", in which every member of the staff had a part, as well as two lady teachers from other schools, namely Miss Lobley and Miss Etherington. "You never can tell" with Miss Burgess, daughter of the Vicar of Brigg, and "The late Christopher Bean" ended this spate of staff plays.

Meanwhile, during the nineteen twenties, boys performed several one-act plays. They were performed in the hut with a platform used for Assembly. Scenes from "Midsummer Night's Dream" led the way, financed by a Master's lucky sweepstake win at the Exchange Club. It was followed by "Thread of Scarlet", "The Monkey's Paw", "Pot of Broth", "Nexton Blee", "Waymakers", and scenes from "Macbeth" among many others.

The Briggensian, school magazine, had been born in 1914, but was a meagre affair compared with today's flourishing journal.

It was nearly strangled in its infancy by the grip of economy, becoming a threepenny production without a separate cover. The school notes were short and very formal, and the reports of matches also brief and inadequate. One attempt was made to secure contributions by having a page or two entitled "Intelligence tests", for which each form wrote questions referring to incidents in school life, such as "Who went into the swimming-bath in his black stockings?" When the Old Boys' Association began to circulate The Briggensian among its members, the magazine came to life under T. G. Richards' control.

Sports Day was an event in the life of Brigg until fees were abolished, and was attended not only by parents and Old Boys, but by well-wishers such as Bank Managers, Solicitors, Doctors, Clergy, and farmers, all with their families. Knight and Lamb were the prime movers in arranging and controlling the athletic events. As soon as Morris and Reed joined the staff they gave valuable help in improving the measurement of distances and ways of judging records and introducing fresh contests.

Speech Day was a humble affair. It was held in the hut used for Assembly and plays, and attended only by the boys and the Governors. The Head's report was the chief item. The boys sang the rather dolorous song which had words by Bryant and music by his sister. Miss Bryant at one time was connected with the Daily Telegraph, and for several years she arranged for the School to have a free copy every day. Daughton made Speech Day into a gathering for parents and friends in the Exchange Hall, and later in the Cinema because it was larger. He secured Visitors to distribute the prizes, Sir William Robertson and the Earl of Yarborough being the first two.

In 1927 there was an eclipse of the sun, visible as a total eclipse in the midlands, and Daughton took a party of boys to view it.

In 1932 about a dozen boys joined a shipload of boys from secondary schools on a tour of the Kiel Canal and the Scandinavian countries. Stockholm, Oslo, Goteburg, and Copenhagen treated their visitors most generously, giving them huge meals and free tickets for the trams.

In 1938 another party had a week in Paris at Easter, visiting Versailles, and listening to Racine at the Comedy and Faust at the Opera, as well as doing the Louvre and Luxembourg.

During the 1939-45 war, a dozen boys in 1944 spent a fortnight in a large house near Alford, going out daily to help farmers who were short of labour.

M. GAZE, 1921-46.

FORTY YEARS LONG

IN the early twenties the number of boys attending the school would be about 250 of whom perhaps thirty would be between 8 and 11 years old and in the prep. school divided into forms 1 and 2 which accounts for our still calling our lowest forms the thirds. There were only about twenty boys in each form of the main school except the VIth. Here there can only have been about half a dozen on the Arts side and even fewer on the Science side, counting both upper and lower VI which were taught together.

Most boys left after taking the "Cambridge Senior", corresponding to O Levels, which, if an appropriate standard was reached, conferred exemption from the Matriculation examination, the minimum requirement for University entrance. The VI form boys took the County Major Scholarship Examination at Lincoln often in what would now be considered odd combinations of subjects such as Latin, French, and Mathematics.

The French examination was set and marked by a lecturer from Nottingham University, a benevolent old gentleman called Monsieur Bourdache, well known to generations of boys because he also conducted the oral examinations for the Cambridge board. There were formal grammar questions and always a list of English proverbs to be turned into their French equivalents, the only possible preparation for which was to learn dozens of them by heart. There may be a case for sending boys out into the world with the distilled wisdom of the ages at their tongues' end but the poor boys may have wondered why it should have to be in two languages. Eventually a book of French proverbs and their English equivalents appeared and became a sine qua non for teachers and pupils alike. The compiler was Monsieur Bourdache.

Any boy whose parents could afford to pay could come to the Grammar School if he passed a fairly easy entrance examination but one does not recall that the general intellectual standard was lower than it is now. There were certainly odd boys who made little academic progress but on the other hand, the scholarship boys included the cleverest from Scunthorpe and Barton as well as those from our present area.

By the mid-twenties the school numbers had been swollen by the regular intake of non-fee-paying pupils who had passed the County Minor Scholarship Examination but there were still reminders of the time when parents had to be persuaded to send their boys and to keep them at school. One of these was the termly report. The Headmaster, Mr Bryant, scrutinized every remark made by subject masters and if he thought that a remark was discouraging to boy or parent, he asked that it should be changed or qualified. This might entail the re-writing of the whole report as no crossings-out were permitted. The report had to be neat, clean, and well written. Mr Bryant had built up two schools from a financially precarious state to a state of prosperity and knew his business.

In these days when would-be boarders are turned away it may be interesting to know that at one time, when a boy was born to any local family who might be expected eventually to send him as a boarder, Mr Shute, the Housemaster, used to get in his car, call upon the family, and after suitable congratulations ask if he might put the boy down as a prospective boarder. The Boarding House was then a business concern run for his own profit and at his own risk by the Housemaster to whom, at £40 per boy per annum a full house was worth more than his salary as a schoolmaster.

Before 1928 the buildings were very different. The present library, the laboratories, and the upstairs formrooms were not there, nor were, of course, the gymnasium and the buildings beyond it. The Woodwork room was where the Art room is now and Art was taught in the form rooms. The present senior and junior cloakrooms which look on to Grammar School Road were the Chemistry and Physics Labs. respectively and there was no Biology Lab.

There were three or four Army huts, relics of the 1914-18 war. One was for the preparatory school which was taught by Miss Couldrey except when she was teaching Art in the main school. The others were divided into two by flimsy screens, one of hessian. People in one room could hear most of what was said in the other and were thus afforded a choice of programme but the general effect was inhibiting to the master and distracting to the pupil.

The huts were heated by coke stoves and rooms 1 and 2 had open fires. William Lamb, the Latin master, used to teach from in front of the fire on cold days and often caused speculation amongst the boys as to whether or not his trousers or gown would ignite. The gown began to smoulder on many occasions and was just a charred rag and the trousers were usually brown at the back.

The Headmaster, Mr Bryant, had no secretarial help except at the beginning and end of term when accounts went out and fees were paid. The amount of administrative work was much less, of course, in those days although it was beginning to pile up. Mr Bryant taught Latin to some forms, R.I. to the higher forms, and once a week took what was known as a "revision" period with every form in the school. During this period he saw every boy's exercise book in every subject, marked off the week's work and made comments both to the boys and to the subject masters if he thought fit. He always wore a gown and carried or wore a mortar board. In some ways he was remote and formal in manner but he certainly knew his boys and what kind of work they were doing. He was held in great respect and, I think, affection.

We had prayers at the end of the school day as well as at the beginning and Mr Bryant used to dismiss the school by a peculiar movement of the head towards the door together with an opening of the mouth and a lowering of his bearded chin. Whether he actually said anything I never knew, but a colleague caught the beard movement perfectly in a series of drawings which had a private and limited but very appreciative circulation.

There was no P.E. or Games master, the work being shared by all the staff except Miss Couldrey and the Headmaster. On fine days, each man took his own form for P.E. at morning break. None had been trained to do so. Men who had served in the first World War taught their boys the square-bashing drill they themselves had learned in the Forces. The others imitated or invented what they could. No games were played in school time, but there was a good deal of activity between 3-30 and 5-0 o'clock except in the darkest months. Most of the masters played or refereed and took part in the cricket, swimming, and athletics coaching in the summer. The cadet corps had been disbanded but a relic remained in the shape of a rifle range in main school. The space between the wall and the woodwork still to be seen at the East end was recently found to contain mortar rubble and small pieces of lead. It used to be the backing for the targets.

Leisure interests other than games were encouraged by the annual School Competitions. Certificates were awarded for proficiency in a remarkably varied series of activities which included, in addition to the still familiar violin and piano playing, singing, and essay writing, such forgotten skills as mapping, whistling, the translating into verse of Latin and French poems, and the reciting of original poems. Speech Days were enlivened by the inclusion of the choicest items from the Competitions with at least once a euphonium solo, solos for mouth organ and flute, and it is interesting to recall a piano solo by C. F. Maw, the father of Nicholas Maw, who has achieved fame as an avant-garde composer.

A. I. MORRIS, 1926-46.

TEN YEARS ON

LOOKING back over 25 years one is inclined to see everything through rose-coloured spectacles and to begin every sentence with "I remember . . ." If, then, I dwell on all the pleasant things and forget the black days I must be forgiven on the grounds of senility and general debility.

My appointment to the Headmastership of Brigg Grammar School in May 1944 was really rather a comic affair. There were eight candidates and all seemed to me eminently suitable and according to them they had much better qualifications and more experience than I. My interview didn't take place until after lunch (stew in the refectory, washed down with a good draught of cold water, which Mr Daughton described to the open mouthed candidates as his favourite beverage). At lunch the candidate sitting next to me informed me that he had been told by one of the Governors that he had already been chosen. I thought, "This is a rum affair when I haven't even been interviewed!" But neither he nor I knew our Governors then!

However, I was eventually sent for and offered the post, which I accepted with alacrity. Walking round to the H.M.'s house for tea with the Colonel, Edgar Taylor, the Clerk to the Governors, and

Ralph Baker, I heard J. T. Kettle call out, "Well, we've got a new Headmaster, NOT the one I wanted, but we've got him!" I only realized afterwards that J. T. wanted a Chapel man, for this really had been the policy of the Governors and had become almost a tradition of the school.

The appointment was made in May and in June I went up to Brigg to meet the Director of Education and the Governors to talk about the financial responsibility of the Boarding House, which the County was eager to assume. I took advantage of that visit to spend an evening with Knight and Richards and I learned everything I could about the school, the Staff, and the Boarding House.

I got married in August and spent three days of our honeymoon at the Angel Hotel and nosed around the School and the environs of Brigg. We moved into the H.M.'s House about a fortnight before term started. This was the time of potato breaks and the autumn term started at the end of August. Cook and Matron Godbert both stayed on with us and so we did have a fair amount of guidance and although domestic help was difficult to find, it wasn't impossible because domestic work in the Boarding House exempted girls from call-up.

The blackout had been lifted slightly, but they were dull and dreary days, and although the invasion of Europe had begun the war looked as if it could go on for years, and rationing for ever.

My wife took over the onerous job of running the domestic side of the Boarding House—a difficult task and not always rewarding.

I strove to pick up the reins that Mr Daughton had laid down and I soon realised what a magnificent staff I had inherited. Anything was possible with this support and I vowed that I would try to select any new staff as carefully as the present members had been chosen. This wasn't always easy, but looking back I can only think of one or two who did not fit in, but, as they quickly moved on, little harm was done and the friendship and fellowship of the Common Room under Knight, which had been so pronounced a feature of the school, was preserved throughout my headmastership.

While the war lasted we carried on as best we could, but as soon as peace came the Staff on Service began to return and we were able to get down to re-organisation.

Being a lazy man, I left the organisation of a subject to the master in charge of that subject and it worked. Personally I had always disliked interference from above and if I thought I was doing my job I used to expect to be left alone to do it and so I gave complete freedom to the staff to plan their work and get on with the job of teaching.

The 1944 Butler Act was beginning to come into being and we had high hopes of new buildings, reorganisation and what not. Little did we realise that all the money available was to be spent on the Secondary Modern Schools and that the Grammar Schools were to become the Cinderellas of the education system. One of my worries was how to keep my staff and attract the right new men when the accommodation available was so limited and much of it so poor. However, it soon became clear that men were more attracted by a friendly Common Room and a right attitude to school mastering, than by new buildings and new equipment. I had a bee in my bonnet about the difference between being a schoolmaster and being a teacher! I tried to explain it once to John Birkbeck, the Director of Education, but I was never sure that I made him understand that I thought teaching was a 9—4 job, while schoolmastering was a 24 hours a day job, with boarding house duties, and prep, and societies, and plays, and music, and everything, all done voluntarily and out of school hours !

The summer of 1945 saw Gaze's production of "A Midsummer Night's Dream" on the playing fields. It was a beginning after the drab war years and if the standard wasn't very high, it was fun and a great many people enjoyed it. We had a mock election in school at that time, too, and Commander Dixon (C) and Tom Williamson (L) both came and talked to the school. We thought we were terribly up-to-date and modern !

I tried to grow mushrooms in the air raid shelters about this time and I always remember coming out of the dim interior with my first picking and meeting Lester Locke and proudly displaying my produce ; the only comment I got was, "I suppose we shall be having mushrooms for breakfast every day now !"

Gradually the staff came back from Service and the work of the school began to settle down and produce better and better results, though the County Scholarships and Open Awards which we eagerly looked for were slow in coming. We said farewell sadly to our lady teachers who had served the school so faithfully during the war years—Miss Wright, Miss Hague, and Mrs Thackray amongst others. I still hear regularly from Miss Hague (now Mrs Ratcliffe) and after 25 years she still thinks B.G.S. the finest school in the country.

During all my years at Brigg one of the things I enjoyed most was the odd period off on a summer morning for sports heats—there was something invigorating in finding all the staff and all the boys on the field at the same time, especially, too, as the standard of performance was so high—the scene was straight from Waugh or Hornung. The fact that every member of the staff was missing his most important period with his most important form, and each one told me so, added to the enjoyment !

It was in 1946 that the county first began to ask us to make up our minds as to our future status—were we to remain Aided or to become Controlled ?

The Chairman of Governors was not eager to rush into a decision but I felt that a decision should be taken as then we should obtain our new buildings. The Colonel, of course, was right. He had experience of official and semi-official promises and he realised that there would probably be no buildings whatever the decision. After much thought, one Sunday after tea at Scawby, I suggested that we might give notice that we intended to become independent. I thought the Heavens would fall on my head, but they didn't. We talked the idea out and decided to sleep on it for a few days. Later in the week, the assistant Director, a very able one, came to see me and asked if we had come to any decision. I said I thought that the Governors would decide to become independent. The look on his face made the bluff worth while! "If you do," he said, "we'll build the biggest grammar school you've ever seen, right on your doorstep, and break you!" We didn't realise then that they couldn't have done that. The money wasn't there! The Colonel, anyway, felt that the school had been founded for poor boys of the neighbourhood and he held that he couldn't ask the Governors to take a decision with which he didn't wholeheartedly agree. At the moment it looks as though this was a mistake, but the future may well prove that it was a wise decision. We must wait and see what happens to the Direct Grant Schools.

In 1947 the School held a Fete in aid of the Swimming Bath Fund. The amount of work that went into that was prodigious—Old Boys and their wives, Staff and their wives, parents galore, all went at it like mad folk. When the day arrived the place was agog—market stalls all round the field—masses of goods for sale—stacks of books—boxes of fish—everything. At 11.5 a.m. precisely it began to rain! Everything was moved into the School and all was ready on time. As an occasion, because of the weather, it was probably a failure, but financially—we raised £666—it was a great success. We didn't realise that with building restrictions and one set-back after another we weren't going to get the swimming bath for ten years.

Another vivid memory of that period was the full Inspection by the Ministry of Education. In prospect—forbidding, in being—grim, in retrospect—pleasing, if you get a good report! Unblushingly I admit we put ourselves out to please and the report was excellent. Much was made of the inadequacy of the buildings and we were told exactly what buildings we wanted (we already knew) and what we should probably get. The forecast proved sanguine; we got nothing! I didn't enjoy the Inspection, in fact I hated it. The Inspectors were pleasant enough chaps, but I'm doubtful whether a Full Inspection serves a useful purpose, for although the Inspectors can recommend changes and buildings and equipment, they have no power to enforce their recommendations.

Another vivid memory is of the Christmas Concerts: Rhodes and Jarvis singing—the Boar's Head Carol—Richards and Pratt coming into their own—Geoffrey Jackson playing the piano—faster at each performance—Romans reading Dickens and Thumwood playing "Le Cygne". Happy, happy days.

I think what made B.G.S. a happy place was that somehow we always managed to see the funny side of school life and to laugh when better men would probably have cried!

I remember the night at dinner when Commander Wells promised us an extension to the Physics Lab.—a promise generously and quickly fulfilled by the Appleby Frodingham apprentices. The day, too, when we with our own hands completed the Secretary's room—a great achievement—and finally the day in 1957 when the gymnasium and swimming bath came into use. Always we were striving to overcome our shortcomings. Should we have done better if we had had all the buildings and facilities we wanted? I doubt it. It is the striving to overcome obstacles that produces the spirit to conquer and to win through, despite every difficulty. At Brigg we achieved that victory. I do not think it is the fine boys or the splendid staff that make a school, but the spirit of service to an ideal handed down from generation to generation of boys and masters. Long may that spirit of service survive! The forties and fifties may not have been the most distinguished years in the long history of the school, but to those who had the privilege of serving the school, in any capacity whatever, they were golden days.

N. C. MATTHEWS, 1944-59.

RETROSPECT, 1924-33

BRIGG Grammar School, when I first knew it in 1924, was a curiously mixed institution. It was certainly very full of life, and one had the sense, in so far as a boy of nine could have the sense of anything, of starting a new and rather exciting existence which was going to introduce one to all kinds of new interests. The foundations of what was intended to be a brilliant legal career ending on the woolsack must be carefully laid and one felt instinctively that Brigg was the right place in which to begin. There seemed to be the right kind of inspiration. There were great men at the top of the school going off to the Universities, and there were younger boys who seemed to know all about the political life of the country. There was the Headmaster, a venerable white-bearded figure, whom one saw in the distance every day and at closer quarters once a week for "Revision". He made an impression of dignity and kindness, and many stories circulated of the great things he had done for the school, of how he had found it a poor country grammar school with a handful of boys, and had made it one of the largest and most efficient secondary schools in the county. But the Headmaster was always to some extent obscured by the much nearer figure of the Housemaster, Mr. Shute, whose efficiency, both in teaching and in running School House, is unforgettable. He was rather terrifying to a small boy, but one came to feel a great affection for him, and when he left to go to Sleaford in 1932, it seemed as if something quite irreplaceable had gone out of the school.

This was one aspect of Brigg when I first knew it, but another, which could not fail to be quickly noticed, was the inadequacy of the buildings to the life of the school. My first term was spent in a tin hut, where Miss Couldrey had charge of the two lowest forms. Fortunately it was summer, and apart from the heat the place was fairly tolerable, but in winter the wind blew in under the doors, and the stove smoked. Happily I was moved into the main school after one term and did not experience the "tin tabernacle" in winter, but there were other places, old wooden army huts, which housed some of the upper forms, which were nearly as bad. Even in the main buildings the various classes were so close together that sometimes one wondered which lesson one was supposed to be doing. The only people who seemed to live in comparative comfort were the sixth form and the Headmaster, who occupied the newest of the brick buildings. The equipment was not much better than the school rooms. Some of the desks were very ancient, the blackboards were difficult to write on, the library, if it existed at all, consisted of only about a dozen books, and the scientists were always complaining about their apparatus, although one felt that Mr Shute would have made anything work.

When Mr Bryant retired in 1927 and Mr Daughton was appointed Headmaster it very soon became apparent that this state of things would not be allowed to continue. Strange rumours began to circulate among the boys, and almost incredible reports reached us of how the Head had browbeaten the Lindsey Education Committee and the Governors, and by sheer force of character had compelled them to produce large sums of money for the modernising of the school. Whether this is a true account of what actually happened I do not know, but that was how it appeared to us. There was a glorious year during which everything seemed to be chaos as far as the buildings were concerned. Some of the old brick classrooms were pulled down, the huts disappeared, and the playgrounds looked like a ploughed field. The workmen were a great joy to us all, and no doubt we hindered the work. Thanks to Mr Daughton, the educational side of school life went on with very little interruption. I was taking an examination at the time, I suppose it must have been the School Certificate, and it is really a great tribute to the Headmaster's skill and thoughtfulness that our work was so little disturbed. At last the great day came when we moved into our new rooms, and the buildings were formally opened by the Earl of Yarborough. It was a great occasion, but I am afraid all I can remember of it is Lord Yarborough saying that his schooldays were definitely not the happiest part of his life.

The completion of the new buildings was a great triumph for Mr Daughton, but if anybody imagined that was to be the end he did not know his man. The Head threw himself into the task of making the fullest use of our new material. In particular one remembers the development of the sixth form library, a great help to boys sitting for county and university scholarships, and the encouragement which he gave to school musical activities. We very soon discovered also that even his building ambitions were not satisfied, and we began to hear of a projected Assembly Hall and Gymnasium, but by 1930 the slump had begun, and the Education authorities began to economise rather than to spend more money.

We all came, I think, to realise Mr Daughton's real heroism in pursuing this tremendous work of the expansion and development of school life in the face of serious handicaps of ill-health, and I hope we also appreciated the intense religious devotion which was the motive of all his work.

E. W. KEMP (in The Briggensian 1944).

10th January, 1932 ("I don't know why I remember that date so precisely, but I'm sure it's right")—April, 1936.

SALMON paste for breakfast on Wednesdays . . . green slime on the swimming bath . . . dormitory feasts by candlelight . . . blue litmus paper turning pink . . . crafty cigarettes in the cycle shed . . . rollicking parties at the end of term . . . How the memories come flooding back.

It was on January 10th, 1932, that I arrived as a boarder. The new physics and chemistry laboratories had just been completed, and were indirectly responsible for my arrival. My father, an architect, had visited Brigg with his friend, the builder, a man named Jenkinson, also from Doncaster, to have a look at them. He decided Brigg would do nicely for my brothers, Tony and Ted, and for me.

Fees for boarders were about £15 a term all in, and for day boys about £4. Mr Shute, a frightening and impressive figure, presided over the boarding house with its 40 or so boys. I was told on arrival to watch out, as Mr Shute was inclined to throw things like wooden mallets at those suspected of inattention. We spent a lot of our time in the dayroom, with its two long wooden benches, its smoking fire, ping-pong table, and miniature billiards. It had electric light, a modern touch that had not yet reached the two dormitories, Old Lower and Old Top, which relied on flickering, Dotheboys Hall gas jets, and which were perishing cold in winter.

The head boy was Eric Kemp. Before I had been there a week he gave me 50 lines for something or other. It was many years before I felt I was even with him. He is now Canon Kemp, chaplain to the Queen and a distinguished theologian at Exeter College, Oxford. The editor of "Who's who" gave him 45 lines.

After my first term the formidable Mr Shute left to become headmaster of Sleaford, and Mr J. T. Daughton, who was headmaster of Brigg, also took over the boarding house. Small, with only a fringe round his bald pate, with thick, dark glasses, and a purposeful and distinctive gait, he was a remarkable and endearing little man. Long before the days of the radio catchphrase, Duffy had one of his own—"very definitely". It popped up in public and private utterances, and the boys made merciless capital out of it.

Duffy was a kindly man, and at a time when such views were heresy among schoolmasters he was, I think, an opponent of corporal punishment. Once he caught me smoking and led me to his study. Duffy never used a cane. He preferred—and so, incidentally, did I—a plimsoll, which he referred to as a "dap", a word I have never heard used by anyone else. He told me to bend over. Flip-flip-flip-flip-flip went the dap. Six being the statutory number I awaited the final flip. It never came. In retrospect, I can only put it down to the fact that Duffy's dislike of the job had overcome his sense of duty. He could hardly have stopped at five because he couldn't count. Duffy was an expert mathematician.

Of the masters of that time I can remember them all clearly. Among them were Bumper Knight, who taught maths.; Dickie Thumwood, who played the 'cello and was rumoured to have mysterious links with Russia; Prague Gregory, who got his nickname after correcting a boy who had pronounced "Prague" as if it rhymed with "vague"; Chips Morris, who had a beautifully dry sense of humour; Dodd, who blew himself up dramatically during a chemistry class, but luckily suffered no serious harm; Armstrong, who also ran the Scouts and took us on a memorable £10 all-in walking tour in Germany around 1934, when we got mixed up in a Hitler demonstration; Toddy Henthorn, whose love of history was infectious; and dear old Billy Lamb, a warm-hearted idealist, dishevelled, inseparable from a smelly pipe, and somehow a bit of a misfit.

As a boarder, however, I got to know best Harry Pimlott and T. G. Richards—Pimmy and Tiger. Both were then bachelors and had a tiny sitting room above New Top and New Lower dormitories. To them Duffy delegated many of his housemaster's duties. Both were in their early twenties, conveniently close to boyhood, and Tiger in particular could usually be relied upon to take the right side when decisions had to be made. Tiger was a delightful companion on cycle rides or swimming expeditions to the Ancholme.

As befitted a Welshman, he was a fine pianist who helped to arrange occasional piano recitals in the school hall by an old music teacher who lived in a cottage by the War Memorial and whose name, I believe, was Dr Rowbottom. The school piano, newly tuned, would be pushed into the centre of the hall, and Dr Rowbottom, who must have been well into his seventies, would settle at the keys, blowing on his fingers. Poor man, he suffered from rheumatism, and each concert became a greater ordeal than the last. But he was still an expert, and Bach and Beethoven flew from the piano in glorious cascades of sound before the perspiring Dr Rowbottom sank back, triumphant but exhausted. Coupled with visits to the amateur

Every Saturday Tiger and Pimmy would dispense pocket money in the dayroom—sixpence for seniors and threepence for juniors. With Woodbines at 2d for five in a paper packet it was enough.

In their sitting-room, Tiger and Pimmy had what was then a novelty—a portable wireless. It was a massive affair in a mahogany box, portable, I suppose, if one were a Samson, and powered by batteries that had to be charged at a local garage. Those were the days of the great Petersen—Harvey fights, and if Tiger and Pimmy were in benign mood they would invite the favoured few to listen to the running commentaries whenever a championship bout was broadcast. Fading batteries at the crucial point were an accepted, but irritating hazard. Tiger and Pimmy were uncommonly twin-like in their habits, even in their choice of cars. Their Hillman Minxes were identical.

Dormitory feasts were common, with kipper snacks at 2d. a tin and savoury ducks at 1d. from Mrs Dunham's shop as popular items. One night the boys of Old Lower decided to go one better and have what now would be termed a midnight rave-up in the cricket pavilion. We in Old Top got wind of it, and decided on sabotage. Just outside the dining room door was a large fire hose, coiled on a hook. Our plan was to let Old Lower cross to the pavilion, then lock all the windows behind them and, as they clustered round vainly trying to get back into the house, to turn the fire hose on them from the upper windows.

At one o'clock we crept downstairs and uncoiled the hose. It was too short to reach upstairs, so we trailed it to a dayroom window and turned on the tap for a trial run. It was a fat hose, like an elephant's trunk, and a great mass of water surged out of it. Not, alas, from the nozzle. After long years of attention from nothing but moths its whole length was perforated like a colander.

By the time we had got a message through to the boy operating the tap the corridor looked like a canal and the dayroom like an Indian paddy field. In the midst of the resulting consternation, a bewildered Tiger, droopy from interrupted sleep, came slopping through the flood. We explained how grateful he should be to us for exposing the inadequacy of the fire precautions, but this was not warmly received. So we suggested Tiger should go back to bed, and we would have things shipshape in no time at all. This he sportingly agreed to do, and for two hours, with towels, bathing costumes, shirts, vests, pants, and anything else absorbent on which we could lay hands, we mopped up.

One of Tiger's duties was to keep a wary eye on the school magazine, but in my days as its editor he was a most amenable censor. My successor as editor was Ken Bell, and both of us became newspaper reporters. One day we found ourselves on the same job, and shared a taxi in London. He told me that Tiger had died. It was many years since I had last seen him, but I felt a sudden, deep sense of loss. It seems odd to think of B.G.S. without that jolly little Welshman.

Sports days were great occasions, and none greater than the inter-school sports in which Brigg, Clee, and Gainsborough did battle. In my day the fight was always between Brigg and Clee, with Gainsborough always trailing. But Gainsborough had Green. He was a magnificent athlete with the heart of a lion, who carried Gainsborough almost alone. Even now, some 35 years later, I can see Green flying along, streets ahead of his rivals. But one man—even a Green—could not put Gainsborough ahead of Brigg and Clee.

In contrast to the sports days, Sundays were sombre and dismal, beginning with a crocodile parade to the Parish Church. The small boys wore Eton collars and Eton suits, the older ones black jackets, striped trousers, and stiff white collars. We all wore mortar boards, and snaked reluctantly along the High Street to hear the Rev. Mr Burgess (I fear he was more often known as “Bug-juice”) preach at the morning service.

Some of us hit upon the idea that old Bug-juice might be coerced into shortening his sermons. If 40 pairs of eyes were fixed unwaveringly on him in the pulpit, we thought, he might become tongue-tied with embarrassment and cut things short. So for several Sundays we all fixed the Vicar with a relentless stare. But something went wrong. The sermons seemed to grow longer, so the idea was abandoned. No doubt the Vicar had mistaken the concerted gaze for rapt attention.

In the early 1930s, flying was still something of an adventure, so there was great excitement when a young man in a flimsy aircraft settled in a field near the Ancholme and offered flights at five bob a time. Duffy, having seen the aeroplane, gave orders that no boarders were to go up.

Dick Porter, however, now a dentist at Woodhall Spa, was not one to let a little thing like that stop him. A greater obstacle was his lack of five bob. He had only half a crown. I also had half a crown, so after school we cycled down to the field to see if we could do business with the pilot. He agreed to take us both up for the price of one if we could squeeze into the passenger seat in the open cockpit behind him.

So, with Dick and me hanging half in and half out, the ramshackle machine bounced and bumped over the rough ground, did a few hair-raising turns over Brigg, and then jolted along the field once more to a safe halt. As we had been facing the rushing wind all the time (80 m.p.h. said the pilot), Dick and I had our eyes closed from take-off to touch-down. We could hardly claim to have had an aerial view of the town, but it had been an exhilarating experience.

Among my friends of those days I remember particularly Sid Kitchen, a fine wicket-keeper for the 1st XI and also goal-keeper for the school. He was the son of Joe Kitchen, centre-forward for the great Sheffield United, with 66 appearances to his credit in the three years up to 1921. Kitchen pasted me all round the dayroom in my first term. I had a belligerent tongue but a body designed for pacifism. Kitchen and I became the best of friends, and he coached me in the art of keeping wicket, so that I became wicket-keeper for the 2nd XI. This was the gateway to Clee, Mecca of the fixture list. When the match was over the evening was spent in gay abandon among the roundabouts and candy floss of the pleasure beach.

Another good friend was Tom Athron, a day boy of great academic gifts and enormous strength, whose party piece was to punch the brick wall of the physics lab. with his bare fist. Despite the force he expended, he never seemed to suffer injury.

And what of the others ? They spring to mind by the score. Laurie Collins, who on swimming outings would work his way along a high bridge over the Ancholme by his fingertips and then drop in, plumb centre ; the Tatam brothers, Bill and Geoff, with flaming ginger hair ; I saw Bill, years later, bald as a coot ; John and Piggy Sykes, from Epworth ; the three Wright brothers, Joe, Henry and Dick ; Fatty Welch, whose mouth we stuffed with soap to stop him snoring . . .

Many friendships ended with the war, only three years away. Some, alas, permanently.

Even allowing for the rosy tinge of time, they were good days, those days at Brigg in the early thirties. Carefree and uncomplicated days. If anything has changed, I hope it is the salmon paste. If that soggy slop (tinned salmon mixed with breadcrumbs to make it go further) is still lobbed up for breakfast, then I hope the school motto is still the same. Those faced with salmon paste need it. Fortitudine.

R. G. WALKER, 1932-36.

REMINISCENCES OF B.G.S. 1938-1948

THE war dominated my period at school. I have memories of four or five visits to the shelters in a night, of the blitz on Hull and the sight of flaming onions, and the headmaster, Mr Daughton, in his A.R.P. Warden's hat. There were Scouts riding round as Messengers and the older members of the Troop joining the A.T.C., then off into the services. Pupils discussed at length whether the Scouts or the A.T.C. were best at drill. I shouldn't have thought there was much doubt but the argument went on !

There were the Old Boys who enjoyed flying low over the school, so that work had to stop temporarily.

From the boarding house we watched and counted bombers leaving surrounding dromes—Elsham, Scampton, Hemswell—and coming back. Later in the war there were the American planes forming up for the daylight raids—quite an impressive sight. There were dangers, too. I remember leading a night hike in the vicinity of one of the aerodromes when glider towing practice was going on. A hawser came sizzling down to the ground not far from our little group.

Mr Jarvis was in the Fire Service and I have memories of trying to catch him at home to pass me for a proficiency badge. I spent several Sunday afternoons on his doorstep and watching the house martins nesting under his rafters. Then there was the night game played in the vicinity of his house, during the course of which I fell up to my waist in a sewage ditch. He and Mrs Jarvis sponged me down on the draining board, clad me in some oversize garments and packed me off back to the boarding house.

Towards the end of the war Mr Barker arrived, just in time to teach us some German which would enable us to talk to the P.O.W.s I later had some ex Brigg P.O.W.s working for me in Germany on our R.A.O.C. Vehicle Depot. They had happy memories of Brigg and district.

It was always fun when the sign GRAMMAR SCHOOL ROAD was repainted by the U.D.C. employee who spelt it GRAMMER.

Mr Matthews came and we changed to a new hymn book (from the Brigg Grammar School Hymnal to the English Hymnal), but sang many of the same old hymns. Dr Henthorn was heard to remark, "Plus ça change, plus c'est la même chose!"

Biology started during the war. There were staff shortages, and memories occur of the old-style P.E. lessons, in which one practised "breathing"! I often wonder what action would have been taken if someone had refused to take part in the drill.

The Boarders' gardens behind the woodwork shop were quite a feature of the war years. I produced innumerable crops of radishes and cress, and roasted potatoes behind the bushes. I smoked a clay pipe there, too, but gave up smoking when I left school.

Other memories are of Johnny Bell shipwrecked at sea, of Oliver Kingdon (who walloped my backside at regular intervals in the School House when I first arrived and made undue noise outside his door!) towing gliders across to France at D.Day time.

I remember happy days playing golf at Elsham with Geoffrey Harrington by the good graces of A.I.M., who obtained a schoolboy rate of membership for us.

Then there are memories of getting wet feet negotiating the ditch between B.G.S. and the High School to talk to the girls. It is quite criminal to separate boys and girls into different schools!

Then I recall early experience of typewriting on Mr Thumwood's machine in the Physics Lab. (I have had a succession of typewriters since). I remember well, too, Mr Thumwood teaching John Kingdon and me to sing the bass part in the morning hymns. The idea caught on and all the prefects appeared with tune books. It added a bit of interest and encouraged me later to sing in choirs.

Memory brings back 'cello solos from the Physics Lab., going on long into the night, to lull the boarders off to sleep. We sometimes wondered whether Mr Thumwood ever went home!

Sunday afternoon "walks" in the boarding house, crocodile fashion, were horrors. Looking back, I wonder, why not boots and a good hike?

Then there was the waste paper the Scouts collected and stored in the swimming bath changing room, the logs the Scouts collected in Col. Nelthorpe's woods and distributed to the old folks. During my time we spent many afternoons in his woods, building him a sort of shooting lodge. It probably collapsed soon after completion but it was good fun.

I well remember the feverish competition to be first in at the swimming pool. On one occasion in my haste I dived in with my cap on and on another with my watch on. Later I swam for my college and we won the University Championship at Oxford.

I have memories also of hardy types like Horton cycling in to school from 7 or 8 miles away, carrying a shovel on his bike and helping to clear the snow en route.

RECOLLECTIONS OF BRIGG G.S. 1945-52

TO recall one's schooldays is to try to unravel a tangled skein of sentiment. One's memories are bound to be coloured by subsequent experience and particularly by views formed when one, in my case, crossed to the other side of the desk and became a teacher. One has also to be careful not to find faults in institutions which in reality belong to oneself.

I shall begin with the place that the school thought to be most important: the classroom. The third form classrooms, where I was first taught, soon after the Second World War ended, were huts, adequate, though a little underheated in winter and overheated in summer. The atmosphere in the latter season was somewhat soporific and I remember being asked once by a teacher if I was asleep—I wasn't, quite. The classrooms in the main school were very pleasant and the atmosphere was one of keen competition. This was encouraged by quarterly form-orders; the solemnity of these was impressed upon us by the visits of the Headmaster to each class to read them out. Life was like a game, interesting enough for those who were winning it. Subjects like Scripture, not included in the competition, were thereby rendered unimportant. I do not remember being told about the purpose of any of the subjects; but should I have understood if I had been? Algebra was like a jigsaw puzzle without a picture; chemistry was similar but with different methods and different letters. I remember being given full marks for a painting and not having the slightest idea how it was different from other paintings for which I had gained fewer (far fewer) marks. Nor did I have the intelligence (perhaps the maturity?) to ask. The quality of the information we received was admirable and everyone did ten subjects for School Certificate.

Life in the Sixth Form was slightly more sophisticated. We did a broad general course in the Lower Sixth; even the Arts Students had to do some Mathematics. I recall being told how logarithms work (which I remember) and the purpose of calculus (which I don't). I acquired an extensive knowledge of recent history and a certain realisation of what literature and criticism were about. On the other hand I avoided thinking unless pushed. I copied paragraphs verbatim for essays from books and rather regret not having been prevented. I memorised pages of Cicero but I cannot remember now anything he said. While I was in the Sixth Form, School Certificate and Higher were replaced by the General Certificate of Education. This was the only major change which I remember occurring while I was at Brigg and even that seemed not to make very much difference. I am left with a general impression of stability.

The staff were stable, too. There were relatively few staff changes, little apparent disunity among its members, and a low proportion of eccentrics. Several had been at Brigg for many years and were obviously attached to the school. Contact between members of staff and pupils was frequent but formal. I find I can remember eighteen staff surnames, a few nicknames and no Christian names. I think we were kept fairly firmly in our places as children, and I remember little of what might be called personal conversations with members of staff. They were not unfriendly but rather remote. We kept each other at arm's length: pupils were just as much responsible for this kind of relationship as staff. Our teachers were most conscientious, no lessons were missed, no books were unmarked; they worked for us in a discreet, unpompous way.

We who were boarders were very attached to School House. Its gaunt outlines hid a warm comradeship. I do not remember being badly treated by the older boys in my early days. We progressed from dormitory to dormitory and from day-room to day-room, by imperceptible stages becoming more senior, but never being separated from the whole body. On the other hand we were rather cut off from the day-boys; they were different. We always beat them at games, or so we used to think. Our lives were organised without being over-organised. We were organised to write letters home on Sunday mornings; I wonder how many fond parents would have heard nothing if we had not been. This led to a perfunctory school-boy style of letter-writing which has never left me. It hasn't made me into an enthusiastic or even a regular letter-writer. But what could have been done about that? Homework was also organised and generally organised well. Even the teachers who were not attached to the boarding house used to have to supervise us from time to time (and I sympathise with them now). We acquired some study habits which have certainly helped me, for one, since. On the other hand we had time to gain some proficiency at sport, or billiards, or just loafing.

Discipline was generally good without being vicious; life was not particularly spartan. I think I could describe my attitude as sometimes impertinent (though never to the Headmaster whom I held in awe) but not rebellious. It seldom occurred to us that we might object to the way things were done. We accepted it and that was that. I was caned several times and I don't think it has done me any permanent harm. When we became prefects we became rather unquestioning appliers of the same rules that we had (mostly) obeyed.

Sport seems to have taken up a large amount of our leisure time. We played football in all weathers, and ran cross-country through snow and sleet. An attempt (I think unsuccessful) was made to introduce Rugby, and hockey was just being introduced as I left. The summer was crammed with sporting events. We swam or splashed whenever we could. We played cricket in the least likely places (often dangerously near windows); and we ran. Athletics was my favourite; we even had time off from morning school to compete in heats. Everyone had a chance to enter, and it must have taken a lot of time to organise.

Music played a fairly important part in school life. I learned very many songs and discovered an enthusiasm for singing. I remember rehearsing parts of oratorios for Speech Day. I am amazed that the whole school could have been divided into four parts and made to sing in tolerable harmony, but so it was. The results did not lack volume at least. I learned to play the piano. I was once tested to see if I was good enough to accompany "And the Glory of the Lord": I wasn't. We had concerts when quite famous people came to sing and play. One of the musical highlights was the singing of the Boar's Head Carol by the staff in almost complete darkness.

Other leisure activities were limited. We used to do Woodwork on Monday evenings and Scouts on Wednesdays. Both these were popular. "Clubs" or "societies" must have been rather difficult to organise, since the day boys left, mostly by bus, immediately after afternoon school. There were a few debates; and I used to enjoy writing for the School Magazine. Drama was rare as far as I remember. I think the English master once tried a comedy with the boarders but we couldn't keep our faces straight enough to say the lines. Humour won and he gave up in despair.

Contact with the outside world was easy but superficial. We were never cut off from it. We used to rush down to the Tuckshop at break and into the town after school. But boys don't acquire an involvement in an adult community very easily and I never gained much knowledge about or feeling for Brigg as a place. Brigg had a cinema, a bookshop, a church, and a river, and that seemed to be all. I once went to a hall in the town to hear Mr Macmillan make a political speech (it must have been in 1951 and it was, mainly, about houses) ; and this stands out by its unusualness. I do not remember any "outside" speakers coming to the school. Outings were rare ; perhaps the school could ill afford them. I visited some interesting places (venturing as far afield as Wales) with the Scouts in the holidays. On the other hand we didn't imbibe a snobbish or superior attitude to people outside ; we had no attitude to them at all. There was no local public school to feel jealous of and I cannot even remember whether or not there was a Secondary Modern School in Brigg. Girls were taboo ; I think none ever entered the school grounds. Co-education would perhaps have been bad for study ; and co-educational boarding impossible. A little more experience of real agricultural Lincolnshire life might have done us good ; but how can a child be experienced ?

The school was (scrupulously, I suppose) neutral in religion. We said prayers in a routine kind of way and walked in a long line to church on Sundays. The Headmaster's wife ran a Bible Study group on Sunday evenings ; when we were seniors we decided it was for Juniors. Scripture lessons left the impression that the Bible was a bore ; I remember little intellectual discussion of Christianity or any other religion. Christians on the staff were discreet enough not to try to press any kind of commitment upon us. I think there was a lack of enthusiasm in some quarters for the religious terms of the Education Acts.

The school performed the function it set itself admirably. I have never ceased to be grateful for the academic progress I made and for the work my teachers did in helping me to achieve a university place. Our tree of knowledge, if a little lacking in cultural flowers, was solid and worthy, with many branches.

MEMORIES OF BRIGG GRAMMAR SCHOOL 1947-1955

ONE'S first memory of arriving at B.G.S. as a boarder in September 1947 was of being told that the Matron was ill and Mothers of new boys could help to make their beds ! If this was to help us feel at home it didn't work ! The prefects, headed by Markarian, seemed giants—certainly old enough to be teachers—and one was over-awed by a mass of buildings and many strange faces. Fearful of getting lost, frightened of doing things wrong, hoping that half the things that were supposed to happen to new boys were just not true—these were one's memories of the first few weeks!

My first form-room was one of the wooden huts, heated by a huge coke stove which was useful for cooking chestnuts and producing weird and wonderful smells to annoy masters. Stifling hot, the hut was never too hot for "Prague" Gregory, who wore mufflers and an overcoat at all times. He appeared in the same outfit to supervise boarders' prep., but we enjoyed this for he always appeared to fall soundly asleep as he read his large volumes at the old-fashioned desk in Room 2. No other master ever sat there! We had our favourites—some allowed you to borrow ink, rulers, etc., without question, while others allowed no movement or word for a solid hour. Wednesday nights during winter saw a change of routine when the Choral Society occupied Rooms 1 and 2. We had to carry everything up to Rooms 7 and 8 and most people forgot something important! In the early years Saturday evening was only relieved of considerable boredom by the advent of a string orchestra, known affectionately as the "Phantom Fiddlers", to play in the Music Room at the end of the upstairs corridor.

The House was quite bleak and bare to begin with by present-day standards but slowly there were changes. Individual lockers replaced old-fashioned chairs and chests of drawers on the landings. New blankets and counterpanes in bright colours enlivened the looks of the dorms. The top floor washrooms were enlarged and improved later on and just before I left there were extensions to the ground floor which gave the prefects a larger room and provided a number of day-rooms instead of the one large one in which I had grown up. Being a prefect at the time of the change we rather regretted the passing of the open fire place and our Sunday afternoon toast-making sessions. A larger room overlooking the field was little compensation!

Saturday morning school was taken for granted and there was little spare time. The thought of a free Saturday afternoon was usually shattered by the Headmaster's curt after-lunch announcement "The House will watch the match". Towards the end of my stay in the House films were introduced as a Saturday evening luxury and we were quite happy for parents to pay extra on the bill for these. They were much better than we saw on the occasional visit to the "Grand" on the last nights of the Spring and Summer terms and the odd Saturday afternoon when snow, etc., prevented football matches and the cinema ("provided you sit upstairs") was the (only) alternative. The Christmas term always ended with a Christmas Dinner, with blazing pudding, and a play produced by each dorm., for everyone's entertainment. All rehearsed in secret but everyone knew what was coming—apart from the Prefects' contribution. This was usually rehearsed for the first time the night before!

Sundays were famous for their letter-writing sessions in school followed by the walk—in twos—to Church. Strict rules about Sunday dress in grey suits, black ties, etc., were enforced by the prefects before leaving and the Captain of House pocketed the corporate collection before we set off. Compulsory churchgoing may have put many boys off "organised" religion for life.

Each term had its distinctive activities. The long rehearsals for Speech Day and the Christmas Concert filled the Autumn term. The "Boar's Head" and carols sung by the School Choir were a regular part of the latter for several years before "Trial by Jury" and "Scrooge" became more popular features. The Spring term was short and this fact was usually appreciated by ardent Cross Country "fans" who found Brickyard Lane, etc., a bit much two or three times a week. Why did boarders have to do so much extra training? Athletics, cricket, and swimming provided more variety in the Summer and in the second year a chance to play croquet and eat strawberries at "Tiger" Richards' was always a longed for treat. New games for B.G.S. made their appearance—Hockey on Wrawby Road and Rugby (John Bell's work?) meant that more field space was required and we saw the extension of the playing field in the direction of the High School. The gap between us (Grammar School and High School) became smaller (one dyke and one hedge). On reflection, was this prophetic—predicting present day co-operation and working together, which in those days was unheard of?

Societies had their day—and some ceased to be. Debating had its ups and downs but we never expanded beyond Room 7. The Philosophical Society, a brain child of I. B. Butterworth, had a few select members but never had any shattering effect on the School. His Chess Club was more popular and survived. Reading The Briggensian today there seems to be a much wider selection of clubs with much more ambitious programmes.

Every term there appeared a small notice on form-room boards inviting contributions for the school magazine, The Briggensian, but one never realized the panic and heartache of the Committee until one became a member of that illustrious group. One highlight of my time on the Committee was a visit to see the magazine being printed in Caldicotts' workshops at Gainsborough. Little did I realise then that I should work in that town and visit those offices very regularly. Each Committee wanted to revolutionise the "set-up"—a new cover, new design and layout for every page, modern headings, etc., etc., and every year "Tiger" would patiently explain the problems and restrictions. He was saving, then, for a bumper edition in 1969; it seemed a long way off but many of us haven't forgotten his ambitions and hope to see it materialise—as his Memorial, at least. We did change the cover—and received many comments! We had to chase boys for articles—and staff for their notes. The boarders slogged to address the Old Boys' envelopes when there was little prep. to be done at the end of term and the Magazine came out on time! Why do the House notes still appear in the same form expressing the same sentiments about Cock House, etc.?

Room 4 for a long time was the home of the Sixth Form—hallowed ground for small boys. When I entered the Sixth Form I was asked to become an Assistant Librarian and eventually with Dr Henthorn, Jimmy Kemp, and others spent most of one Summer holiday in preparing for the School Library in that room. Hours and hours were needed to classify all the books according to the Dewey System and parts of it I have never forgotten. What a help when I visit our local library ! We hoped to expand quite quickly into Room 3 (or the Chemistry Lab.) but the library still has the same confined area with even more books. We wonder when the School, reputed to be a seat of learning, will have a library which is more worthy of B.G.S. than a converted classroom.

In my last term there was a great “do it yourself” campaign. The Sixth Form, exams over and without academic work to do, resorted to being labourers and the school set about building the secretary’s office and store room. This was a much enjoyed project. Many felt they could leave the school saying they had left their mark !

One never realises what a place or a community means until one has left it. As time goes by one appreciates and values many aspects of life at B.G.S. which one took for granted. Maybe the fellowship and corporate life, which has been a feature of the school since its foundation because of the boarding house, will be remembered and cherished for many years by more than one Old Boy of this Century. There have been, and will be, many others who feel the same.

“FORTUDINE” : COMMUNITY AND IDEALOGY

(I) Prospect.

A kaleidoscope of impressions ; 1955, age 11 :—

EVERYONE is so much bigger than we are ; there are great creatures wearing coloured and long trousers called prefects, who tell you what to do ; other boys threaten to initiate us by ducking us in the wash-rooms ; then there are the men teachers. They wear black gowns (except the history master, whose gown is green with age) and are obviously harassed trying to reconcile the different states of knowledge we new boys had acquired at our primary schools. Even so, they threaten us with new subjects : physics, chemistry, German or Latin next year, but French now ; geometry now, algebra in the summer term ; English grammar.

Everyone is against the “first years” (by some system we cannot comprehend we are also the Third Form). It is no immediate consolation to be told that you can grow out of it. There is a system of lines and Wednesday afternoon detention to keep us good ; we wonder what happens in detention ; Saturday morning school is a big enough change without losing Wednesday afternoon.

Our classrooms are two old huts—reputedly First World War—cold, cramped, and uncomfortable. The rest of the school is venerable—including the carved names in the brickwork. We resent being told not to imitate this craftsmanship.

We are warned that though we may have been top at our old school, everyone at Grammar School has been like that. For the lucky “A” Form there is the security of knowing at least that the “B” Form is worse ; the “B” Form feel miserable.

Then there is homework : the difficulties of finding out how you can work, with or without the radio on, in a room by yourself or in the living room where it is warmer but more chatty—problems with parents.

How we can put up with it for six or seven years is unimaginable, how to do O and A Levels incredible. It all seems a long way on. We grit our teeth (we haven’t heard of clichés yet) and press on hardly consoled by the school’s motto “Fortitudine”.

(II) A Social Analysis.

I want to analyse my schooldays in terms of two notions, one being “community”, the other “ideology”.

The school in many ways obviously wasn’t a Community :—

1. There were two distinct communities, the teachers and the taught. Though staff-pupil relations were remarkably harmonious, the staff were a separate group about whose affairs, disagreements, and policies the pupils knew nothing. Whatever went on in the staffroom, nothing ever emerged in the classroom to shake our conviction that the staff were a cohesive oligarchy. Relations with individual staff members were frequently close but marked by a distinct awareness that it was temporary, and it was never on a basis of equality.

2. Age was the most decisive factor among the pupils. A person’s status was determined promptly by the answer to “what’s your year ?” Personal friendships over age barriers were rare, and this continued after school. Lunchtime privately-organized games almost never spanned more than two years.

3. Within the age “years” there were divisions between A and B forms and at the Sixth form level between Science and Modern Studies. The A and B division was intellectual in origin, and was liked and resented as such. Since the form rooms were different the two forms went very much their separate ways apart from some exchanges for O Level work. Moreover school meals sittings were also A and B, and so prevented lunchtime fraternization. And final-year Modern Studies lived in the Library and had lockers, while the larger Science group had a more formal classroom. Almost no fruitful “two cultures” (to take the phrase of the time) discussion could take place.

4. The Prefects were an additional group in the school. There were too many of them and they had too little to do, but they had a status they did not know what to do with. A Prefects' room would have heightened consciousness ; the year after I left it was granted and apparently made some desired difference.

5. There was a difference between the inhabitants of the boarding block—School House—and the rest. Though only 15% of the total numbers School House was a close-knit group that tended to transcend the age gaps. They were “on the premises” in contrast to the many who lived over ten miles away, and were the backbone of the horde of organizations and extra-curricular activities the school boasted. Other House groups were geographically based, but were more obviously fictions for allocating games-players to different groups.

Where then was the community of the school ? First it lay not in internal cohesion but in our distinctiveness to outsiders, identified by a school uniform, and a corporate identity for inter-school games, debates, and dramatic presentations. We were proud of our school. And second, the internal community was the form : it contained most of our friends and enemies. Ad hoc ones emerged in special circumstances—school teams for games which involved travel created some of the most lasting, while those created round drama productions were the most enjoyable, since age limits had to be ignored.

Turning now to Ideology. When at school I felt it had the attributes of a minor public school : on reflection, this was a mistake of identifying the substance with the form. The form was certainly derivative : uniform, prefects, houses, games, boarders, no girls, intellectual snobbery, and the inculcation of a work-and-do-well ethic ; but was the substance ?

The uniform was rather sensible—a blue blazer was wearable outside the school ; the three ties, school, School House, and Prefects, had identificatory functions and were not objectionable in design ; but the school cap was designed with a long peak for the cricket season, and was distinctly unpopular garb even for that. Guaranteeing the cap was worn devolved upon the Prefects ; they tended not to bother. In fact discipline was very easy-going. The Prefects never felt like waging crusades, except to keep cigarette-smoking away from the school buildings and at the bottom of the field, and the September—October and May—June campaigns against litter (this was their approximate rhythm). Overall there was little to do except on rota check to stop people wearing outside shoes inside the main school, and arrange the ringing of the bell to signal period changes. Captain of School appeared to be just the Headmaster's dogsbody.

It is probable that the main rationalization for internal school games was the need to keep School House occupied and out of mischief—especially in the summer with athletics training in order to secure standard points. School House's corporate spirit usually triumphed. For members of the other Houses, games could be left to those interested, able, or coerced with moral argument. However, there was the farce of cross-country, which was in theory obligatory for all. Some housemasters excused those of zero ability ; some of us firmly took a gentle walk round the course ; but an explosion was inevitable—and happened—when one of my friends attempted to sabotage the race and the runners. It appears to have made no difference. The school was very successful in inter-school games ; we were proud of it, but there was no rush to get in the teams. Apart from cross-country, games were treated easily, and there was never any conflict between those with brains and those with brawn.

Boarders have been noted before. As individuals they seemed to suffer few problems beyond those of being such a distinctive minority in the school, and they contributed a lot by being there for all activities in the school. No day boy envied them—though they envied our “freedom”—and, to the extent that some were taken for social reasons, being in the House did them more good than harm. Most saw their parents at three-weekly intervals, especially since boarders came from an area only slightly larger than the day pupils.

Having no girls about the place is regarded in the conventional wisdom as unfortunate for the growing youth. The force of this argument is dubious, since in adult life mixing widely in female company is not recommended for males. But no inhibitions seem to have adhered to my friends from the practice.

Intellectual snobs we certainly were, partly being pushed into it by the rejection we suffered at the hands of those who had failed their 11 plus exam., partly by our own efforts, but without any encouragement from our schoolmasters. The work-and-do-well ethic was more their kind of thing, but I feel it affected few ; we seem to have been very highly motivated to do well from the beginning. The school merely reinforced our own (and our parents’) wishes.

Thus, though the form was derivative of other school systems, it was in practice substantially a mild institution wearing its second-hand ideas rather badly and being more humane than could formally be imagined. In part this was a result of size, which at about 400 allowed everyone an opportunity of knowing everyone else, and allowed so much to be done on an ad hoc and personal basis. The other part was in the attitude of the staff : though distant they did so obviously enjoy teaching that the ethos of the school was intellectualist rather than suggestive of any other ideology. Excellence was their criterion of worth and the taught’s slow glimmer of understanding their pleasure. It was a credible basis for a school to operate on, since teaching and learning are at the heart of a school and not its collection of other habits.

(III). Retrospect.

In retrospect, what did we get out of the school ?

Firstly, and obviously, a good education. At worst the school was an efficient machine for getting people through O and A Levels ; at best it also enabled them to have some lasting interest in the subjects taught. We were taught in traditional ways—we were not experimentally exposed to the new mathematics and new language-teaching techniques. Within the limits of this tradition we were well prepared for University, perhaps over-prepared for Training Colleges, perhaps under-prepared for industry (though this was a rare option anyway).

Secondly, we got an intellectual style: an appreciation of excellence from the staff, and—and here I can only speak of the Sixth Form I knew—an appreciation of the advantages of co-operation and discussion. For many of us that type of Sixth Form was and is the justification for the whole exercise.

Thirdly, we actually survived—and that in our first few weeks seemed either implausible or impossibly distant. “Fortitudine” perhaps won in the end.

OWEN A. HARTLEY, 1955-62.

RECENT TIMES

THE time is early morning; the place, the sacred cloisters of a small country grammar school. The smell is of chemicals mixed with the mustiness of unused rooms. The silence is almost deafening, any noise stilled by the over-powering presence of one solitary portrait. The painting is faded now but not dead since two white eyes still peer from the blackness. Two eyes which follow one everywhere, interrogate one, chastise one and in the face of their age, bring one to humility. For three centuries they have looked over the pupils, who wear the steps hollow, and guided them from boyhood to manhood, stamping them indelibly with the Nelthorpe motto and transforming them into that highest form of manhood—the Briggensian.

Then, quite suddenly, the silence is shattered by a single bell and this scholastic background is illuminated by those “for whom the bell tolls”. Another year commences at Brigg Grammar School, bringing with it the hordes of minute primary schools’ products complete with caps approximately three sizes too big, bulging pockets, and empty satchels. How, one will no doubt ask, can such specimens grow into the young bucks of the Sixth Form, hair rippling in the breeze as they run down the nearest master’s push bike in their new eighteen hundred c.c. saloons which stand row upon row before the common room? The answer is relatively simple, since the life offered by Brigg Grammar School is designed to produce the extrovert individualist.

You doubt this? But pray inquire of yourselves, what other school can give miles of hell on earth such romantic names as “Brickyard Lane” or “Catchwater” and produce a race of beings who run for pleasure ? I can guarantee that there is no more shattering experience in the world than to see nearly one hundred Sixth-Form Briggensians rampaging across the school field one afternoon in March, with a variety of banshee war cries and oaths known only to true Anglo Saxons, designed to let the world know that we exist. To continue, where else are schoolboys raised to the pleasures of an open-air, unheated swimming pool ? Surely only an extrovert would break the ice for a dip and then trek across the frozen wastes to the warmth and goodly fare of the school refectory, the gourmet's paradise whose praises have been sung in poetic (i.e. satirical) form. Upon this background the individual is born.

Yet this is no contemporary innovation and from my scholastic career I retain vivid memories of characters who have coloured the brilliant tapestry that is Brigg. Who could ever forget that pupil, now at Oxford, who shaved his head and wrote ten page Ginsbergian poems in that paragon of conservatism, the School Magazine, or him who would quite literally "assemble on the bell" when told to do so ? And even in groups Briggensians tend to be extrovert. There are no guesses as to which hockey team appeared in shorts to play in a Force Nine gale on the rolling decks of a vessel in the middle of the Bay of Biscay or managed to ruin the economy of Morocco by its treatment of Tangier's street sellers. Who else but Briggensians could conspire to walk twenty four miles on a freezing, dark night, to raise over £2,000 for a covered swimming pool many of them will never use ? And then, as if the shattered, torn bodies which lay about the school upon the following dawn were not just warning, the younger members of the school demanded their own charity walk ! It must be the Brigg air !

The contemporary Briggensian, therefore, is something of a rarity amongst the products of new grammar schools and comprehensive establishments. His school is not something which begins with the Eleven Plus and ends with G.C.E. His father was a pupil before him and his early life is filled with stories of the masters he is to meet. At eleven he gains the key to distinction and the ability to meet the almost legendary senior masters whose nicknames are engraved upon the minds of men throughout the world. Indeed, it is these men who give the school its unique flavour. I remember the humility felt when arguing over some historical point to be crushed with the words "I know ; I was there." Alas, some of these men who formed the characters of several generations are no longer here. The obvious example is the soft-spoken "Tiger" Richards, a gentleman who affectionately referred to his boys as "gentlemen" and punished them with three lines or the words, "Consider your bottom severely smacked." Certainly his type of classical tuition will never be repeated and perhaps it is fitting that his language, Latin, has faded as mechanical teaching and cramming come to the fore. But as a member of Nelthorpe House the man who directly influenced me was "Chips" Morris whose pipe still often burns bright in the corridors. As the house-master he knew your father before you and would often draw a direct comparison. However, this phenomenon was by no means limited to the sportsfield and French and whether it was physics (yes, real physics!) or woodwork one always stood in one's father's shadow. Perhaps it led to respect; certainly it brought about a working atmosphere unique to Brigg.

And when his school career comes to an end he becomes one of those blessed brethren, the Old Boys. The corridors of power in this land may not echo with the heels which have trodden the path to Room Nine but certainly Briggensians seem to have an intrinsic gift for making money. And they are never slow to share it with their school.

Some of my fondest memories are of extra-mural activities within school societies. Often have I stood up to my knees in mud and water, with the sleet penetrating to the skin and the ice freezing my fingers to my binoculars, in some Wash marsh and thought, "Well, you silly . . .". But it was a master of Brigg who introduced me to bird-watching and made it a time-consuming occupation. At first I believed his fervour was madness but now I see that total involvement can have untold rewards. Thus it was too with jazz. For, here I was to develop from a casual listener to a member of the school jazz band. Unfortunately, on the first occasion that we appeared in public I do not remember playing one correct note and we never learned much more than "Saints". Perhaps it was just a reaction on my part against the work of the school orchestra because nobody was in a position to say that I was playing the saxophone wrongly! We have never been a really musical school and I suspect better "blowers" than "scrapers". Nevertheless, one brilliant and ubiquitous pianist springs to mind, as does the flautist whose instrument dropped to pieces in his hands during "Air on a G String". Promptly, he stopped the group, stood up and asked, "Is there anyone in the house with a screwdriver?". But if it's a show you want, it's a show we'll give you. Our repertoire ranges from "Jack and the Beanstalk", complete with stage cow and innumerable female impersonators, which lasts anything from three to four hours according to the amount of ad-libbing, to the "Serpent and the Flower", an entertainment complete with an abundance of yokels, folk-singing, a very realistic air raid and a certain person attempting to pretend he is smoking his first cigarette. We can present, complete with lighting, anything from a bloody "Henry IV" to an ear shattering experimental pop group.

But school is not all cold swimming pools and cross-country, monolithic masters and homework. The way has become seemingly easier. Never will any now know the pleasures of Saturday morning school or Wednesday afternoons spent playing rugby with the physical giants of the Upper Sixth. But still boys will take part in those events which mark them as Briggensians. They will stand perfectly still, although someone invariably moves, as the clockwork camera surveys the whole school ("All those with long hair will appear at the edges of the photograph"). And they will know the agony of being thrown to the wolves in a Poirier Cup Debate. They will become Briggensians.

But the one thing which distinguishes Brigg Grammar School from all other establishments is the rapport between masters and boys. Perhaps this is because we have a large number of young masters, who remain boys at heart, and not-so-young masters, who nevertheless maintain a youthful vigour. Each of the "Masters' Matches" is an event unique in the sporting calendar as well as the world knobbly-knees competition. Surely no-one could fail to recognise a man, complete with red fez and bull-whip, driving a herd of boys through the Casbah, as a master of Brigg Grammar School. The typical Brigg master is therefore also an extrovert although it is possible to draw generalisations about his breed. He dwells in a pit of blackness called the "Staff Room", smokes twenty Disque Bleu per day and makes beer on a domestic scale. His means of transport is the cycle, although if he can obtain an automobile for under £5 he will willingly convey any school team (please beware of flying bolts and drooping wings). But overall he is a good egg.

This, then, is a Brigg Grammar School 1968. Perhaps it has seemed like an extract from a school prospectus. But then one finds it very difficult to escape the overpowering atmosphere of tradition and success. One is never forced into anything, but the enthusiasm of all concerned is ample persuasion and gives Brigg its natural flavour. In the future the school as an entity may perish but what boys have never had they can never miss. But we can remember with satisfaction the experience of being a pupil of Brigg Grammar School.

A Statistical Abstract of Briggensians.

THE School began its existing record card system in 1925. From these cards one can learn from where a boy came, for how long he remained at school, what examination success he had and, usually, what his intended career was. Here is an aide-memoire for each individual from which those who knew him can recreate the living person : for Briggensians as a whole a survey of these cards provides a skeleton frame of the past forty years on to which the recollections of individuals can be meaningfully fitted.

2,500 Briggensians are so recorded when those who left after their years in the "Prep" are excluded. A very brief survey indicates significant trends over the years which can be fitted into an historical context. These changes relate to national events, to North Lincolnshire affairs and to alterations in educational systems and fashions. For a non-historian it has seemed permissible to divide the period into four decades and then to present the available data mainly to demonstrate changes through these decades. This seems to provide the simplest and perhaps most meaningful account, particularly as the decades which present themselves seem genuinely to have differing characteristics.

1938—1947 the war years.

1948—1957 the Education Act and the change to maintained status.

1958—1967 the working out of the consequences of this change.

Each boy is considered to be a member of the decade within which he left school.

A survey of this kind ought to be accompanied by tables and diagrams. These of necessity have been produced, for they are the starting points, but they will not accompany the account. Not only would this deter some but it would add considerably to the expense of this whole venture. It is hoped that those who enjoy these things will excuse, rather than be suspicious of, their absence.

The Boys at School.

boys started in the main school. The regularity of these figures is one of many such instances, which while reasonable, need not necessarily have been expected. This case indicates that the school has had no difficulties in filling its two forms of entry.

I am not taking all these entrants into account in what follows. There were those who left for other schools, usually when their families migrated. Their numbers were

103, 67, 79, 107

The first and last figures are high because of an exodus of boys to Scunthorpe Grammar School when it was opened in 1927, and because of the running down of the R.A.F. stations at Hemswell and Kirton Lindsey in the 1960s. In general the emigration rate has been at about 10% and it would seem, although this is not so readily obtainable, that the immigration rate has been much the same.

I shall now concentrate on the 2,143 boys who completed their secondary schooling at Brigg Grammar School during the period. The phrase "completed their schooling" did not always mean what we rather assume today.

over the decades have left the school without completing a course to the School Certificate or later O level examination. I doubt whether many would have realised the great change there has been in this respect. Here is one of the major differences between Brigg Grammar School in 1925 and 1969. Much of the change is consequent on the great emphasis today on qualifications but there was another factor, evidenced on the back of many cards, particularly in the first decade, which we ought not to overlook: "Withdrawn for financial reasons".

The average stay of a boy at school has increased steadily from barely 4 years to almost 6 years. In the first decade many boys came from their all-age village schools at ages well in advance of 11 and often stayed only one, two, or three years in the school. The most frequent length of schooling was 4 years. By the second decade there was a firmly established 5 year course and the emergence of a VIth Form. In the third decade a large VIth Form had become established with a considerable third year element. It was at this time that records for longevity may have been set. In the last decade half as many boys again were leaving after 7 years as after 5 years.

This growth of VIth Form work, a salient feature of the development of the school during the last 30 years, is illuminated by the numbers of Briggensians going on to full time further education, normally in Colleges or Universities. The figures represent an increase from $7\frac{1}{2}\%$ to 44% of all boys completing their schooling here.

Two minor points which emerged incidentally may be of interest. Over the decades

30, 34, 40, 35
boys, a fairly steady figure of one in twenty, have been without a father at home when they started in the school. The numbers of families which have had brothers in the school have, however, increased with the passage of time—

40, 54, 53, 86
A number of factors may be involved here, but there is a prima-facie case that selection has done less to split families than perhaps economic circumstances did in earlier years.

The Boys' Homes.

In 1925 Brigg was the only Grammar School on the main line, and chief means of communication, in North Lincolnshire, between Doncaster and Grimsby. In consequence it was to some extent a North Lincolnshire school, serving particularly Scunthorpe and area. About three quarters of the boys came in roughly equal numbers from Scunthorpe itself, the neighbouring villages, later to be known as our "catchment area" villages, and from further parts of North Lindsey. Two thirds of the remaining quarter were boys from Brigg itself, and the rest were boarders from farther afield. Other than Scunthorpe and Brigg the Grimsby—Cleethorpes area provided a significant number of boys, followed in numbers by Barton-on-Humber.

During the succeeding years the major change has been the increase in numbers of boys from our own villages from 28% to 48% of the total. During the mid period, when in fact the figure rose to 52%, the R.A.F. stations of Kirton Lindsey and Hemswell were largely responsible. Latterly the growth of some of the villages, Broughton is an example, has been a major factor although the increased facility and greater encouragement for able boys from the villages to come to the school must not be overlooked.

The contribution from Brigg itself over the period has risen very slightly but has been at or near 20% throughout. The village increase has been at the expense of Scunthorpe and more distant Lindsey areas. The latter element has steadily decreased through the years, and while a tenuous Cleethorpes link remains, it takes the form of boarders. The Scunthorpe contingent has fluctuated most in number. Decreasing sharply when Scunthorpe Grammar School was opened, numbers then settled and indeed began noticeably to increase again towards the fourth decade when the expansion of Scunthorpe was outstripping its provision of Grammar School places.

The general picture is of a school becoming both more local and more rural in character. While this is certainly true in a narrow geographical sense it does not present an adequate picture as far as the boys themselves are concerned. Wherever they may be living or whatever the time they are in the school their backgrounds are almost certainly more diverse and far-flung than they have ever been before, and, while the R.A.F. is mainly responsible for this, the greater mobility of the nation as a whole is also involved. At the same time the distinction between town and country is being eroded and it is probable that for much of our area now we should use the description suburban rather than either rural or urban.

The Boys' Fathers.

The Headmaster of one of our village schools once told me that he had difficulty in persuading the father of one of his abler boys to agree to his son's coming here. The father accused us of being a "snob school". The implied criticism is one which has been fully developed by many modern critics of grammar schools, who see them as middle class establishments with middle class values alien to the working class child.

I mention this mainly to indicate that there are problems of social classes which inevitably concern us and that schools like ours were conscious of themselves as instruments of social change long before it became policy to try and use them as tools of social engineering. For our own information and help in this field we have always tried to record the occupation of a boy's father. Since we have usually been slightly diffident about this we do not have the entry at all in some cases and in others it is so vague (engineer, company director, labourer) that it may be valueless. Nevertheless the cumulative effect of some 1,500 such entries gives a reasonably accurate picture of the fields of occupation of our fathers and of the social classes of their homes.

Both, and particularly the latter, may be a matter of small embarrassment to some, but I think Briggensians would not have me, for this reason, forbear from discussing them. I would not do so if I had any reservations about the school's attitudes in these respects, and if I did not consider that the facts rebut the charges I began by mentioning. I think the facts have a proper value and interest.

During the first decade 30% of fathers were engaged in Agriculture and 24% in Commerce. These were the two major fields of employment but both have declined considerably since. Agriculture, particularly in respect of its central occupation of farming, has declined most rapidly in the last decade and now employs only 16% of fathers. Commerce, of which Retail Sales is the dominant contributor, now only employs 9% of fathers.

The two growing and now major fields of employment have been Manufacturing Industry and Public Services. The latter is largely due to the presence of the Royal Air Force which has increased the service proportion of our fathers from 4% to 24%. This is a figure likely now to diminish. The former represents mainly the growth of the steel industry and has shown a rise from 16% to 24%.

Occupations from which a steady 10% each of fathers have come are Building and Transport. The only major change here over the years has been the switch of transport workers from rail to road.

The remaining field of employment may be loosely described as "Professional". This has increased from a 5% to a 9% figure and a schoolmaster may indulge his pleasure in noting that this is the result of a seven-fold increase in teacher-fathers, the greatest relative increase in all occupations.

For the second part of this survey of fathers' occupations I have divided the fathers into four not too closely defined groups according to their position in the hierarchy of their employment. These groupings do not coincide with social classifications but give as near an indication of our class structure as is desirable, or even perhaps possible.

Group A are the primary workers in their field, manual or clerical, unskilled or skilled, including some who clearly have a measure of responsibility. Group B are those, such as foremen, immediately above them on the ladder. Group C are the "managers", those working with relevant professional qualifications or those in charge, at least locally, of an establishment. Group D, which I found necessary to define, is of the self-employed, whom it is impossible satisfactorily to include among the former groups.

Throughout the period fathers in Group A have averaged about 50% of the total, but this rose to a maximum of 60% in the third decade and has now declined sharply to 40%. Group D has declined, initially steeply and lately more gradually, from 33% to 15%. Group B has increased from 10% to 17% and Group C from 10% to 26%, this increase being mainly in the last decade.

These are figures which we can extrapolate into the present decade since the boys now in school form the bulk of those who will leave during the years 1969-1977. Interestingly the trends of the past decade seem to be changing again. The A group is likely to remain steady now at about 40%; the B group will remain at 15-20%; the C group will decrease to 15-20%; and the D group may increase again to about 25%. We seem to be moving back to a picture very like that in 1925.

The school has always had a large number of boys from the lower social groups and has never had more than a small minority from the higher groups. Over the years, although this now seems to be showing signs of steadying, the average social group seems to have risen slightly. This may be more a feature of the population as a whole than of our particular sample of it.

I have been surprised by the small number of sons of professional men attending the school between 1925 and 1967. Only 21 fathers have been clergymen and 4 doctors. In the first decade only 4 were school masters. All other normally recognised professions have barely averaged between them a boy a decade.

The impression received from translating the data from cards to tables is of an unusual proportion of fathers who are either self-employed or whose job involves a high proportion of isolation, independence, or responsibility, such as farm-workers, railwaymen, and policemen. If I may somewhat stretch the meaning of the term, the impression is of a yeoman society. Possibly a small, struggling, near-independent school aptly matched such a society.

Some of the individual entries on which this survey is based have a fascination or interest of their own. The modern terms such as farm-labourer and mechanic are made to seem drab and meaningless compared with garthman, drayman, teamster, groom, and wheelwright which are some of the occupations of the past. It is interesting to note that, of the crafts, joinery has continued and that sons still follow fathers in this occupation. But shall we ever again have the sons of Cinema Managers or butlers? Shall we have a father who will describe himself simply as "Gentleman"? Why were there three times as many fathers running hotels and public houses in the war years as at any other time? Finally the inexorability of progress is shown by the family whose father was a Rabbiter and son became a Rodent Officer.

The School Leaver.

It would be interesting so to classify the occupations of Old Boys as to be able directly to compare and contrast them with those of their fathers. This is not possible, partly because the information is less complete, partly because many change their occupations early after leaving school, but largely today because many leave school for full-time further education with no clear indication of what their future field of employment may be. We have to consider "careers" rather than "occupations", hopes rather than achievements. The numbers of leavers over the decades for whom it is possible to do this are—

Of all the factors which influence a boy in his choice of career the family background and what it can offer as related to his ability and ambition has always seemed to me the most important. Wherever the data were adequate I investigated this and found that over the years an average of one quarter of the boys followed in fathers' footsteps, although this has declined to one-sixth in the last 10 years. Agriculture is the exemplar: two-thirds of the boys who have taken up agricultural occupations came from farming backgrounds. Steel, commerce, and transport are all occupations which have an above average attraction for sons, with about a one in three following. Thereafter there is a rapid fall away, finally to a 5% figure in the Public Services and teaching.

Too much need not be read into these facts. Farming and steel are the dominant local fields of employment. There is some evidence that familiarity with an occupation might be a crucial factor. Thus of 119 entrants to the Armed Forces over one half entered the R.A.F., only 6 being R.A.F. sons. The R.A.F. dominates service recruiting not through its family connections, but by its local establishment. Again where a small trail is blazed others will for a time follow: such were the boys who joined Sainsburys in the '30s and Ruston-Hornsby's in the '40s.

A problem when analysing the future careers of leavers is posed by University and some College entrants. If a boy on leaving school for further education specified his final intent I have classified him accordingly. Where a boy enters a course with a narrow vocational end point such as accountancy or medicine I have committed him to it. If he will receive professional qualifications which may offer a wide category of fields of employment, as in science, engineering, social studies, I have placed him in a vague "Professional" group. I have excluded those as "not known" who have gone to University to read Arts subjects for whom there is no further indication of career or occupation.

The facts I have obtained are in detail which makes a tabular presentation preferable. In the absence of this headings are desirable.

Agriculture. Early in the period 20% of leavers went into agricultural occupations and this was the main single field of employment. The figure today is 6%, and the career is pre-eminently the one which you do not enter unless your family are already farming. Significantly the proportion of our future agriculturists who now start by following a full-time agricultural course has risen from 5% to 33%.

The Steel Industry. Over the whole period this has recruited more boys than any other occupation, and the Appleby-Frodingham Steel Company, to whom 205 leavers are recorded as going, is by far the greatest single employer of Briggensians. Overall a 16% average of leavers have entered the industry but there was a peak of recruitment in the post-war stage since when there has been a noticeable decline.

The industry still recruits in the main directly from school particularly at 16. We cannot tell how many Briggensians are professionally qualified within it because they achieve this status by study under the auspices of the companies. We know, however, that a high proportion have so qualified and that for a considerable part of the period under review the industry probably had the greatest share in the education of Briggensians after they had left school, offering to many their only available avenue of advancement.

The Transport and Building Industries. Absorbing 5% and 3% of our leavers respectively, these industries have been more important to us in providing fathers than in absorbing sons. Both are still tending to decline in importance as fields of employment. The railways naturally have few recruits now, and those leavers put in the transport category today are usually garage apprentices, frequently with family concerns. Joiners make up nearly one half of the building total and there is a strong family connection here also.

Public Services. Through the years at 15% these occupations have employed the second highest number of Old Boys. Their greatest attraction was in the pre-war years since when there has been a steady decline. Before the war the local authorities and particularly Lindsey County Council took most of this group; since the war the Armed Forces have pre-dominated. It is a matter of some regret that while 56 boys entered local government between 1925 and 1948 only 16 boys have done so in the last 20 years.

Commerce. The recruitment in this field has shrunk from 18% to 6%. Over one half of the boys have entered retail sales, usually family businesses. A quarter have gone into banking.

Teaching. This is now the largest single profession or employment which Briggensians enter: 16% of all boys in the last decade. The proportion has trebled over the whole period of 40 years.

Professions. Over the whole period this rather ill-defined and heterogeneous group has averaged 15%, and now at 30% it dominates. The proportion of those who have become professionally qualified after a period of full-time further education has risen from 25% to 75%. It is worth tabulating the particular professions of the 254 leavers concerned.

Pure Scientists	...	53	Lawyers	19
Engineers	...	32	Doctors	13
Other technologists		15	Dentists	9
Architects	...	13	Ministers of Religion			6
Auctioneers /			Musicians, artists,
Estate Agents	...	20	librarians, jour-
Accountants	...	37	alists, and others			37

There has not been a steady contribution to these various categories during the period. Only Auctioneers and Estate Agents have maintained an even appeal. Accountants, the largest single class, have attracted few recruits in recent years, lawyers having taken their place. Scientists, engineers, and technologists in large numbers are a post-1955 development. Pure scientists dominated earlier and applied scientists latterly.

The Old Briggensian.

I have been encouraged to conclude by moving away from school records and statistics and attempting to indicate the achievements of our older Briggensians. It is difficult to do this at all adequately since we only know what a fraction of them are doing. We could build our account around a few of the more eminent of whom we have news, but to do this would be somewhat invidious and would fail to give a general picture. I shall attempt, while including particular examples, a more general survey if a somewhat subjective and impressionistic one.

Our recent activities have caused some, not closely connected with us, to realise that we are an old school. "Who", one of them has asked me, "are your famous Old Boys?" We can of course not claim any. A school is fortunate if it can parade one or two household names (although it may not have anticipated this at the time, as many such could be described more aptly not as products, but as anti-products of their academies) but it is not by these originals that a school can measure its success.

I was given an early intimation that Brigg Grammar School, as measured by the repute of its Old Boys, was successful. In the summer before my arrival, at a gathering in Birmingham when I mentioned my appointment, a man from Durham thereon extolled the virtues of Brigg Grammar School. Since this is not the only such incident to my knowledge one may well ask how a small school in an unfrequented part of the country could have such an apparently wide reputation. I would suggest as an answer that Old Briggensians living and working throughout the land are respected by their fellows, and having taken with them a pride in their school have the generosity to associate it with them in their successes.

The Old Boys of a long-founded Grammar School situated in some isolation should be expected to play a large part in all the activities of its neighbourhood. We should expect to find them in our banks, shops, and businesses ; we should not be too surprised to find them strongly represented particularly among the most prospering and enterprising. We should expect to find them in, and leading, our local industries ; we can then take pride when these become far from local in reputation. We should expect to find (as with one exception we do) that we can call on a Briggensian reasonably conveniently and with full confidence for any professional service we may need. We should be confident that many local schoolmasters would be Old Boys, but we might not so readily anticipate the number who would have become leaders of their profession in the area. We should expect to produce constables, but not necessarily several higher ranking Police officers. We know that many will be employed in our local government offices, but might not anticipate the number of those who have reached authority. We might not so readily anticipate, and hence be pleasantly surprised at, the number of Old Boys in important positions in most of our local newspapers.

We should also hope that Old Boys would be as active and productive in their communities as in their places of work. We should hope to find them on the councils, taking a leading part in societies and clubs, active members of their churches, sitting on the Bench, supporting charities and causes of public concern. Here again we should not be disappointed and indeed the local repute of Brigg Grammar School I consider is due in no small part to the full share which its Old Boys take in these civic responsibilities. Here one may perhaps single out a few recognisable individuals :— the recent High Sheriff of Lincolnshire with his previous distinguished service on the County Council ; the long-serving Chairman of the Education Committee of the same Council, and at least three very recent local Council Chairmen.

Ultimately in Brigg we depend on farming and steel. Whatever other local contributions Old Boys make we shall not have fully served our area unless they have played a fair part in these two industries. Since both have developed immensely during the past years and are increasingly adding not only to local but also national prosperity, any part that they have played will have added significance.

It would be interesting to know what fraction of Lincolnshire's broad acres is farmed by Briggensians. I suspect a surprisingly large one. I am confident also that in a county known for excellent and progressive farming there are many Old Boy farmers firmly in the van. Certainly from among the great farming names of North Lincolnshire there are very many which have passed through the records of Brigg Grammar School, usually in at least two generations. There can be no doubts of the quantity and quality of our contribution here.

The steel world is more open, more complex and more changing. Certainly Briggensians will be found at almost all levels throughout the works in Scunthorpe. Many could be named in positions of major responsibility and among them there are those known much farther afield in the world of steel. It is difficult to measure the significance of our contribution, but it cannot have been a small one in the past, and we hope that it will not be so in the future.

At home, then, we expect and have reasons to be assured that Briggensians achieve positions of value and eminence. Can we similarly assess the quality of the contribution which our more distant Old Boys are making to their communities? They are certainly as numerous but they are thinly scattered through the length and breadth of this land and still more tenuously over all the continents of the world, even, at this moment in Tristan da Cunha. We know much less about the work they are doing and seldom anything about the place which they hold in their communities. Those few of whom we know anything must be taken as exemplars of all.

We can record a Roman Catholic Bishop, an eminent Anglican theologian, a Queen's Counsel, two University Professors, two consultant surgeons, two recently retired Directors of Education, two Royal Navy Captains, a Town Clerk, two Grammar School Headmasters. Although it is less easy we can identify success in industry. In the steel works other than Scunthorpe, both Sheffield and Workington have Briggensians in places of authority. Elsewhere we know of managing directors and directors and of men rising to responsible positions in two major electrical companies and in the National Coal Board.

These are some of the men in full career. In most of these occupations we know also of younger men whose energies, talents, and qualifications will assuredly bring them comparable success. There is the newly appointed Fellow of an Oxford College and the young Rector of a large industrial parish, the prize-winning University student of an emergent branch of civil engineering, the young doctor who went to Labrador for experience, the oil-exploration scientist who will now qualify as a doctor in order to be a pioneer in a new field of medical technology. There are well qualified young scientists starting teaching careers in schools which will offer them wide opportunities. There are men in computers and hovercraft. Briggensians are developing careers in I.C.I., Rolls Royce, British Aircraft Corporation, E.M.I., A.E.I., Wimpeys, Shell, Proctor & Gamble and the National Coal Board, to name these few national concerns which come readily to mind. No mention of Briggensians in recent years can exclude the one who, through Voluntary Service Overseas, became involved in one of the tragic refugee problems of Africa and was successfully called on to exercise responsibility and authority far in advance of his years. As the first of five such Old Boys he reminds us also that the contribution of service to the community is not one in which the younger generation are likely to fall short of their predecessors.

As I rather obscurely hinted earlier we lack in our own area an Old Briggensian doctor (unless our senior practitioner can be regarded as O.B. honoris causa). Nationally I can find no representative in Politics or the higher echelons of the Civil Service. May I conclude by suggesting that the nation could perhaps profit if from our newest Briggensians some might add these to our lists?
